Wright, Ira A. Enlisted in Battery C, Feb. 9, 1864, at Coldwater, for 3 years, age 19. Mustered Feb. 13, 1864. Mustered out at Detroit, Mich., June 22, 1865.

BATTERY D.

Battery D was organized at Coldwater and mustered into service Sept. 17, 1861, with the following officers:

Captain, Alonzo F. Bidwell of Coldwater. First Lieutenant, Josiah W. Church of Coldwater. First Lieutenant, James M. Beedle of Union City. Second Lieutenant, Henry B. Corbin of Union City, and Second Lieutenant, William Green of Wayne, Ind.

The Battery left Coldwater December 9, 1861, for Kentucky.

It is to be regretted that the records of the movements of the battery from the time it took the field until June, 1863, were never made, or if they were, failed to reach the Adjutant General's office.

Captain Bidwell resigned August 2, 1862, and the records report that the battery was in command of Captain Church in June, 1863, and the 26th of that month was engaged with the enemy at Hoover's Gap, Tenn.

In September, 1863, the battery was attached to the First Brigade, Third Divisin, Fourteenth Corps, and left its camp at Winchester, Tenn., August 16, for the Chattanooga campaign. It crossed the Tennessee river the 30th and marched across Lookout Mountain over almost impassible roads to McLemore's Cove, and then marched to Gower's Ford on the Chickamauga river, where it arrived September 18th.

On the morning of the 19th it took part in the battle of Chickamauga, changing position a number of times and driving back the enemy by double shotting the guns with canister with orders to fire low and rapidly. The following day the battery was attacked by overwhelming numbers of the enemy, and after a most stubborn resistance, with the infantry supports driven back, and a large number of horses killed, the guns had to be abandoned, only one being saved, the others falling into the hands of the enemy.

During the day the pieces had been double shotted with canister, and often the field in front was swept clear by the destructive fire of the battery, but the gaps were closed up and the enemy advancing to the muzzle of the guns, there was no alternative but to retire and save the men from capture.

No battery in that memorable battle was handled more skilfully or did greater execution, but the fortunes of war compelled it to share the fate of other Michigan batteries on that bloody field.

In November the battery was furnished with 20-pounder Parrott guns and stationed in Fort Negley at Chattanooga. It assisted in shelling the enemy on Lookout Mountain, when General Hooker was advancing around its base, and also assisted in the assault on Mission Ridge by bursting its shells in the enemy's entrenchments.

In December the Battery was ordered to Nashville, Tenn., where it remained during the winter. When the army was reorganized by Gen. Grant, Captain Church was promoted Major and was assigned to the command of five batteries in the reserve artillery. Lieut. H. B. Corbin was promoted Captain of Battery D.

In March, 1864, the Battery was at Murfreesboro, Tenn., and remained there until the following December, when it was engaged with General Hood's forces in his advance upon Nashville.

Captain Corbin having been mustered out February 8, 1865, Lieut. Jesse B. Fuller was promoted Captain the same day and returned with the Battery to Jackson, Mich., July 22, where it was paid and disbanded Aug. 3, 1865.

It had been in engagements at Hoover's Gap, Tenn., June 26th, 1863; Chickamauga, Ga., Sept. 19, 20, 1863; Chattanooga, Tenn., Nov. 23, 24, 1863; Mission Ridge, Tenn., Nov. 25, 1863; Murfreesboro, Tenn., Dec. 12 to 16, 1864.
