30 or 40 feet across. The roof would average about 12 feet high but it was irregular in hight, at the place where I was then standing the roof was about 35 feet high & on the East Side of the raise there was a stream of water formation, about 8 feet wide streaming down, I was then about out of hearing of my companion & I returned to him without any trouble to speak of. We both went into the place that I had discovered & lit a one red fire in the room so that we could see it by a bright light. I then went down in the East end of the room and carved the following incription on a lime stone boulder:-

South west from the entrance

Joseph Duhmiel, & A. F. Mac Donald discovered this room on the 19th day of March 1891 in block characters shaded with red.

We then concluded to start for daylight but just before we got to the Chamber of Frost, we found a hole that we wanted to explore, We climbed up about 30 feet but found nothing but hard climbing. When we got to the Chamber of Frost I throught that I would explore the passage leading North East of the room, I climbed up about 50 or 60 feet and found some curious popcorn work but the passage got too small ~~for~~ for further exploration until it was opened. We got out of the cave at 4.00 P.M. & spent the evening at Capt A.M. Willards.
