What J.F.K Means to Me

by Delphine Armand

John Fitzgerald Kennedy, also known as Jack Kennedy, was born May 29, 1917 Brookline, Massachusetts. He was also the youngest and the first Catholic president ever in the United States. Jack Kennedy was the second oldest out of nine children. He was killed in Dallas, Texas November 22 1963, but his spirit still lives on.

Jack's family, was very important in his road to success. One way Jack's mother helped him be stronger is she was the disciplinarian, but she wasn't really around to support him. Jack's mother also did a television show called Coffee with the Kennedys to let people know about her son and convince people to vote for him. Jack's father was very competitive as a buisness man and taught his children to win; That probably helped with the political races. His older brother Joe was very competitive with Jack but I think they still loved each other. Those are some of the ways Jack's family supported him.

My family helps and supports me too! My parents really care about me and support in what I want to learn and do. My grandparents travel from France to support me and my family; and my great grandmother who's 104 comes to support me too! My brother and I are kind of competitive, but we still love and support each other. My family also would support me if I tried to become president like JFK! They make me who I am now.
