The Making of a President

Maeve Tyler-Penny
May 16, 2011
3D

Did you know that JFK was the second born of nine children th-at lived in Brookline Massachusetts? That his father expected Jack to be a winner at all he did? You may ask you-rself "Could I be like JFK?"...Well, I believe John F. Kennedy was an impor-tant person because of the things he learned in his childhood.

JFK faced many challenges in his childhood. One challenge was that his bro-ther was a fighter, which taught young Jack to think before you act because fighting did not always solve problems. Ano-ther challenge was that his father expected him to be a winner.

teaching him to always do your best, and work hard. One last challenge he faced was that he had to endure very bad back pain after a football injury, ma-king him more brave and enduring.

And so, in conclusion: I wrote about JFK's childhood because I believe this is what made him such a good president! The challenges he faced, how he overcame those challenges and what he learned afterward. My childhood (right now) is also providing me with challenges, changing me in ways even I don't understand.