What J.F.K. Means to Me

John F. Kennedy was an incredible, heroic, courageous man who wanted everyone treated fairly. He wasn't always like that. His family helped him to become a fair president. I think this really made a difference in his life.

J.F.K.'s dad told him "Come in a winner, second place is no good." That wasn't always to easy for him though. His dad wanted him to win in sports but J.F.K was a very sickly child so that was a little hard. But J.F.K did win, he became the president of the United States.

J.F.K.'s mom quizzed J.F.K. and his brother and he really wanted to prove that he could be just as smart as his brother. I think this helped him become an amazing president because his mom pressured him with questions which made him relaxed under pressure when he became the president.

Joe J.R., J.F.K.'s older brother once challenged him to a bike race. But they were biking in opposite directions. At the end they were heading right for each other. Whoever didn't swerve would be the winner. At the end neither swerved and they collided. John had to get 28 stitches, Joe was fine. I think this helped him become a thoughtful president because it tought him to think for himself.

When J.F.K. became the president his two sisters Jean and Patricia helped him put up signs and campaign. I think this helped him because it gave him confidence knowing that people believed in him and thought he could become a caring president.

J.F.K. and I are alike because he cared about peoples' feelings and what they say and so do I. J.F.K. wanted to show that he can accomplish anything when he put his mind to it and so do I. J.F.K.'s family supported him in things he believed in and so does my family. I think one of the reasons J.F.K. became the president is so he could become a fair role model for people in the world and I hope to be a fair role model one day. John Fitzgerald Kennedy was an amazing president, I hope we can have another president just like him one day!
