What J.F.K. Means to Me

Name: Zebulon Robert Erdos
Date: 5/16/11

John Fitzgerald Kennedy Was the 35th president of the United States of America, and Was the youngest president ever elected. John Fitzgerald Kennedy's childhood was very important because it taught him many Valuable lessons.

When John Fitzgerald Kennedy Was a Child he competed With his big brother all the time. Once When there Was a park on the right Side of their house, his big brother Joe Jr. Said to John Fitzgerald Kennedy, "Lets have a bicycle race from the house, around the park, and back to the house, and when we meet, Who ever swerves to prevent a crash is the chicken." But John Fitzgerald Kennedy Was brave, fearless, and competitive, So he accepted the race. Then they Were back to back on their bikes. Then Joe Jr Said, "Go," they both as fast as they can. Joe Jr. Was faster. Then Joe Jr. Went past the half way point. But before John Fitzgerald Kennedy went past the halfway point there was a terrible sound, "crr boom, ow!" It was the sound of a bicycle crash. The two kids had crashed!

Joe Jr. just stood up an dusted himself, he did not get hurt. But John Fitzgerald Kennedy had blood flowing from him, the blood was as red as the stripes on a American flag. John Fitzgerald Kennedy needed 28 stitches. He did not cry at all over the incident but imagine all the pain he felt. After this incident J.F.K. learned to think about things like this face before just accepting them right a way.

When John Fitzgerald Kennedy was little he always needed to read the important articles from the Newspaper. Because John Fitzgerald Kennedy was quizzed at dinner from the newspaper. If he did not know the answer his dad Joseph Patrick Kennedy Senior would be really mad. After the days J.F.K. did not know the answer he learned to always be prepared!

If J.F.K. had lived longer I think he would have been elected for a second term. I think J.F.K. would help the poor, and I think he would fly into space to see the moon himself!
