San Francisco Maritime Turns 25

Celebrating The Best of 1988-2013

In a sense, San Francisco Maritime National Historical Park's journey goes back at least 127 years — when its oldest resource, the square-rigger Balclutha, was launched into Scotland's Clyde River. The park also owes a debt to early-1900s open space activists who protected a slice of San Francisco's northern shoreline, and the Works Progress Administration (WPA), which built today's Maritime Museum in the 1930s.

But it was decades before the park left the dock. A private Maritime Museum opened in the 1950s, and the State of California created a maritime park in the 1960s. The National Park Service gathered together the maritime cultural resources along the western waterfront as part of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area in the 1970s, and on June 27, 1988, San Francisco Maritime National Historical Park was established to preserve, interpret and protect them.

From the beginning, preservation planning was a priority, and staff identified resource needs and developed implementation strategies. Best-sellers from the early years included Historic Structure Reports, a Statement for Management, and a Resource Management Plan. All these studies, and more, eventually folded up into the park's guiding planning document, the 1997 General Management Plan.

At the same time, the resources themselves needed preservation, and the new park needed to establish interpretation and education strategies to serve its visitors.

Staff crafted a Long Range Interpretative Plan to recommend media and programs to articulate park themes and enhance visitor experience, and worked with the San Francisco Maritime National Park Association (the park's Cooperating Association and founder of the original San Francisco Maritime Museum) to create an array of youth education programs.

Even as the park's collections, library and archives professionals were converting paper records to computer databases, and treating and restoring delicate objects, park shipwrights, riggers and project managers were tackling some preservation heavyweights. The Balclutha, Eureka, Epplenton Hall, Hercules, Thayer and Alma were all drydocked at least once. Of the two large vessels most at risk, Thayer was able to be rehabilitated, but Wapama was not.

The park made headway on land, too. An historic lease enabled rehabilitation of the Haslett Warehouse, created the park's first visitor center on the ground floor, and provided a revenue stream to

Welcome

This June marks the park's 25th anniversary as a unit of the National Park System. Staff have been compiling photos to illustrate (just a tiny bit) of that quarter century. I hope you'll visit our website this summer and peruse our "family album!"

While looking back can be both fun and educational, the park is focused on the future. We are committed to being the best stewards possible of America's maritime heritage and to finding new ways to engage the public's hearts, minds, and hands (come be a park volunteer—we need you!) in our mission.

For The Maritime News, though, the voyage is coming to an end. This will be our last edition. But you will soon be able to find, follow, like, and friend park stories, events, and photos using a variety of social media.

It's going to be a busy season. Our 1886 Alma's public sailing programs begin in June. The Maritime Museum will be a great location to view the Bay's competitive racing starting in July. And Hyde Street Pier will host an all-day Sea Music Festival this September.

Please join us this summer, and become part of our next 25 years!

help fund historic preservation projects. The Museum building, and surrounding bleachers, were also repaired.

Along the way, the park produced hundreds of events and programs, from daily tours and talks, to weekend festivals and concerts. Major in-house exhibits included “Cargo is King” and “The Waterfront,” and the park worked with outside curators to produce shows like “Deepwater Steel” and “W.A. Coulter: A Master’s Brush With The Sea.”

Hyde Street Pier hosted visiting vessels like the Princess Taiping (a replica Ming Dynasty Junk), and welcomed long distance solo sailors, like Japanese adventurer Kenichi Horie aboard his Mermaid III, and France’s Isabelle Autissier in the Ecureuil Poitou-Charentes 2.

Some of the accolades the park has taken onboard include: accreditation by the American Alliance of Museums, the California State Governor’s Historic Preservation Award, the CA Heritage Council award, and a National Association for Interpretation Media award.

But for all that, the first 25 years have only been a shakedown cruise. The real trip will begin with C.A. Thayer’s sails catching the wind, next-generation exhibits filling the Maritime Museum, and visitors accessing park stories and resources at the touch of a screen. We’re casting off for the future and you’re just in time—welcome aboard!

The aloft program on Balclutha debuts, 1992. Park Rangers climb aloft in Balclutha’s rigging and demonstrate how to haul in the square sails and lash them to the yards. Check our website www.nps.gov/safr/25anniversary.htm for more information on events and programs happening throughout our 25th year.

By Kristal Ip, Park Guide

Summer is here at last, and that means sailing season has arrived! Two of the most exciting sailing activities at the park will be cheering the America's Cup races and cruising San Francisco Bay on the scow schooner Alma. In between, try making your own sailboat at home!

Start with the basics. You'll need a hull, which is the body of the boat. Next is a sail to catch some wind to move the boat. Then you'll need a mast to hold up the sail and keep it attached to the hull.

Don't forget to decorate and accessorize your boat! Use recycled materials, stickers, markers, paint, glitter, toothpicks, bottle caps, and other things you can find at home.

These are the boats we made at the park!

This is my juice box catamaran (a type of boat with two hulls instead of one), called The White Grape. Materials: two small juice boxes, popsicle sticks, craft glue, part of an old apron, skewer, electrical tape for decoration.

This is another example of a catamaran that was built by Arlo Rucker, the son of Captain Jason Rucker of the Alma. Materials: skewers, duct tape with a splatter pattern, scotch tape, different colors of tissue paper and construction paper.

Here is Coconut Dream, a two-masted schooner with a pair of four-cornered sails. Materials: medium juice box, two skewers, part of an old apron, electrical tape for decoration, and inside the boat is a small scoop of sand to keep it stable in the water. Check out sailing ship rigs here, museum.gov.ns.ca/mma/AtoZ/rigs.html

The Maggie, a sloop with mainsail and jib and optional outboard engine. Material: plastic water bottle, chopstick, drinking straw, balloon, old apron, sand for ballast. (The boat builder is also designing a square-sail rig that might work better with the outboard.)

Now it's your turn! Create your own design or use one of our boats as a guide. Send us a picture of your boat and we'll put it on our website! Happy Summer!

Email a picture of your boat to the editor, cbaird@nps.gov.
