

A NEW BIRTH OF FREEDOM

APRIL 9, 2015

The Last March

The closing drama of the American Civil War took place 150 years ago in April, 1865 when the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia began its last march. Pursued by Union forces, the outnumbered Confederate army was forced to surrender at Appomattox Court House on April 9, 1865.

The surrender marked an end and a beginning for America. The Southern Confederacy collapsed a few weeks later, ending the institution of slavery in America. The Civil War was over, but the struggle for racial equality in America had just begun.

The First March

One hundred years later, in 1965 the first of three civil rights marches from Selma to Montgomery, Alabama, took place to protest segregation and voter intimidation. These marches led directly to the passage of the Voting Rights Act prohibiting racial discrimination in voting.

Engage in this exciting distance learning opportunity for grades 5-8!
