

2011 National Christmas Tree Music Program

The lighting ceremony of the National Christmas Tree on the Ellipse, south of the White House, is the beginning of three weeks of celebration in music. Each night during December, musical groups, primarily from the Washington, DC area, provide entertainment for visitors. It is a one of a kind opportunity to enjoy the sounds of the holiday season against the backdrop of the National Christmas Tree and the smaller trees representing all fifty states, the District of Columbia and the five U.S. Territories.

National Christmas Tree History

For 85 years, the American tradition of lighting a national Christmas Tree has continued, interrupted only briefly in its history during moments of great national travail.

In 1923, President Calvin Coolidge lit a "Community Christmas Tree" on behalf of "all Americans." A Senator from Vermont, Coolidge's home state, arranged for a cut fir tree from Middlebury College to be erected in President's Park (The Ellipse) for lighting. President Coolidge declined to speak at the ceremony, but he did push a button switch to light a 60-foot tree. Later that evening, the Marine Band performed in concert near the tree.

Sir Winston Churchill appeared on the South Porch with President Roosevelt for the lighting ceremony in 1941. Both men delivered Christmas messages to the gathered throng before sharing the official lighting duties. By the next year, Washington was under a war-imposed blackout. Lights were placed on the tree in 1942 but never lit, and the tree remained 'dark' from 1942 through 1944.

In 1954, the lighting ceremony was named "The Christmas Pageant of Peace," and a "Pathway of Peace" was established featuring smaller, decorated trees – one for each state and territory.

In 1963, the tree was not lit until December 22, after a service at the Lincoln Memorial, concluding a 30-day period of national mourning that followed the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The beautiful Colorado blue spruce that serves as the current National Christmas Tree was planted on the Ellipse in the winter of 2011. The tree was brought to Washington, DC by the National Park Service from a nursery in New Jersey.
