Sources Used

The Yellowstone National Park Archives and Research Library in the Yellowstone Heritage and Research Center (Yellowstone National Park, Montana) contains countless invaluable published and unpublished sources. First and foremost, the archives contain correspondence, official government documents, and unpublished reports concerning Yellowstone National Park. These holdings are extensive, and for the most part processed in a user-friendly way. Master plans for the park, although in fragile condition, are also accessible. The library contains most published and unpublished texts concerning the park. It also houses most of the park superintendents' annual and monthly reports, dating—in the case of annual reports—from 1872. Annual reports of the director of the National Park Service are also available. The photo archives contain countless wonderful photographic prints.

The Historian's Office at the Heritage and Research Center houses a collection of photocopied documents concerning Yellowstone National Park compiled from other National Archives depositories. Mary Shivers Culpin collected these photocopies for her research into the roads, concessions, and administration of the park. These documents are processed and referred to as the Marcy Culpin files. Many of these documents are also available in the archives. The center also contains the Historic Structure Survey forms for most of the structures in the park. Completed in 1999, these forms contain some useful information concerning park structures.
