Abraham Lincoln was born in a log cabin similar to the one shown here and the symbolic cabin housed in the Memorial Building. Step inside this small, sparse, one-room home that is typical of pioneer cabins from this period.
Imagine the daily life for a family of four living within the walls of this small space. The rough-hewn furniture contrasts with a few finer items. The family Bible was always within reach.
Although Lincoln only lived on the Sinking Spring Farm for the first two years of his life, the legacy of traveling from a log cabin to the White House exemplifies the American experience.
