GEORGES ISLAND

Imagine the world as you know it turned upside-down. Your country, state, town, and even your home have split into two. During the Civil War, the the nation split as the northern and southern states fought against each other in the bloodiest war America had ever seen.

In the years leading up to the war, Boston fortified its harbor to protect its crucial trade routes and port. When it became clear that battle would never reach as far north as Boston, Fort Warren was given a new purpose: a Confederate prison. The fort's great cannons were taken from the ramparts and sent overseas, and over 2,000 soldiers and prisoners from the south and west were locked up in the makeshift prison cells of Fort Warren.

Fort Warren continued to defend Boston Harbor throughout The First World War, the Second World War, and the Spanish American War. The island was used as a training facility well into the 20th century until its designation as a National Historic Landmark in 1970.

What's That Sound?

If you were standing on this island 150 years ago, what do you think you might have heard? What can you hear as you explore the island today? Use words or pictures to describe two sounds from the island's past, and two sounds from the present day!

Mealtime

Take a peek inside the Visitor Center to see what people ate while living at Fort Warren.

Who had the smallest meal?

Why didn't each person get the same meal?

Write a Letter

Imagine living on this island as a soldier or prisoner. Put yourself in someone else's uniform and describe what the fort is like. Are you well fed? Is the work hard? Do you miss your family?

A large, blank scroll with horizontal lines for writing. The scroll is unrolled, showing a series of horizontal lines across its length. The scroll is light beige with a darker beige border. The top and bottom edges are rolled up, and the scroll is set against a light green background.

Life at the Fort

Many soldiers played games and sang songs to pass the long, tiring days at Fort Warren. During World War II, Bastion A – also known as the “Dark Arch” – was turned into a recreation hall to entertain soldiers, and included a movie screen and even a bowling alley.

Visit Bastion A and imagine what it looked like in the early 1940s. Are there a lot of soldiers there? What are they doing? Draw a cartoon below of what you think you might have seen!

Morse (De)Code

Before there were phones, computers or electricity, messages still needed to be sent quickly. In the early 1800s, Morse Code was developed in order to send messages over telegraph wires.

What was the name of the popular Civil War song that began on Georges Island? Use the key below to crack the code!
