General Grant National Memorial

From the Plantation to the Plains & Deserts

African-American soldiers on the Western Frontier 1866-77

Saturday, Feb. 16, 2013
11 a.m. and 1 p.m.

African-American regiments were first raised in the United States Army during the American Civil War, with Ulysses S. Grant as Commanding General of the Armies. It was on the frontier, under the presidency of Grant, that they were first commonly deployed.

Join the National Park Service for a special talk exploring how African-Americans became a permanent part of the United States Army in 1866 and the hardships they endured both in facing hostile Indians and in surmounting the bigotry and resistance of some of their fellow American citizens.

This program will be held in the Visitor Center at 11 a.m. and repeated at 1 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 16. Seating is very limited. To ensure your place, please call (212) 666-1640.
