

Historical Interpretation and Education Internships

George Rogers Clark National Historical Park offers internship opportunities for college or graduate students. Intern positions support interpretation operations and educational programs in the park

Park Information George Rogers Clark National Historical Park, the site of British Fort Sackville, became a national park in 1966. At 10 a.m., the morning of February 25, 1779 a British garrison surrendered to American Colonel George Rogers Clark. His American army, aided by French residents of the Illinois Country, had marched through freezing floodwaters to gain this victory. The fort's capture assured United States claims to the Northwest Territory.

Qualifications College students gain experience using the information they have learned in the classroom, learn more about their field of study, and gain real world job experience working for a federal agency.

George Rogers Clark National Historical Park wants to create an internship that fits your needs both academically and professionally. The park will offer on-the-job training to perform a wide variety of tasks within the national park.

Duties and Responsibilities Interpretation: An internship can be designed around your specific needs. These experiences can include the different facets of working in a national park such as running the site's visitor center, conducting historic weapons demonstrations, graphic design, and much more. The internship will also provide practical training for how a national park operates.
