

Lands End Labyrinth at dusk. Photo by Nathan H. Hall.

Lands End Labyrinth

This mystical artwork sits on a small plateau off of the Coastal Trail overlooking the Golden Gate Bridge. The Labyrinth was built on the Vernal Equinox in 2004 by Eduardo Aguilera out of stones collected from the surrounding area. Aguilera has created labyrinths throughout the Bay Area.

The Labyrinth is a place of meditation. Walking the Labyrinth is a journey towards serenity and clarity. It is constructed in the style of the seven-circuit Chartres labyrinth, built in the 13th century. Visitors who use the Lands End Labyrinth for meditation often leave a small token of thanks at its center.

In addition to the countless solitary visitors who have walked the path of the Lands End Labyrinth, it has occasionally been the focus of public spectacles. For the 2004 Winter Solstice, Aguilera lit the Labyrinth with luminaries, and for the 2005 Spring Equinox the Labyrinth was set ablaze with flaming logs.