

VESTIGES of Lands End

Remnants

In addition to the highly visible and iconic ruins of the Sutro Baths bathing tanks and several excavated archaeological deposits, isolated physical remnants of historic-period events and activities are scattered across Lands End.

Many of these are visible along modern trails, including abandoned railroad grades, a railroad tunnel cut, road traces, gun mounts from dismantled Army batteries, landscaping, building pads, and the maritime navigation aid “Painted Rock”.

Top left: Painted Rock, seen along the Lands End Coastal Trail; Top right: Remains of the once-stylish floor at the entrance of the Sutro Baths, now visible along Point Lobos Avenue; Bottom right: Remnants of the Sutro Heights Conservatory tile floor.