Community reaction?		*When completing a park master plan, citizens ask about change in policy. The policy has been in place for a long time, but they still get occasional letters of people who want to see it changed.	*Getting the community to be part of the solution. Generally accepted policy.	* Thousands of homeowners located along the boundary of the preserve areas and they are used daily by many people. Had about 600 individual comments during implementation of the regulations about 2 years ago. The reaction at the time was basically 50/50 split between full leash law and off-leash. Board of Supervisors compromised with a partial leash law. Reaction was mixed then, and is still mixed, but there has been a positive	*There is backlash at times. Some times enforcement is confrontational. Sometimes a lack of understanding or the issue or they don't agree.	*Get feedback from a small percentage of the community. General feedback is in favor of the regulations. Small vocal minority that wants off-leash use.	*Rules have been in place for so long, seems like it is pretty well understood. Does not seem to be a big push to change what they are doing. Not too much community reaction.	*In past 2 years there has not been a large amount of public comment. When doing master plan efforts for preserves, dog use is a topic of interest.	* Dog owner groups are active and want to be notified if any change in dog areas or places where dogs are or are not allowed. Citizens show up when these matters are on the agenda.	N/A

Keep records of where bite happened, circumstance, etc. In 2005, there were a total of 286 dog bites. Of the 286, only 26 were strays. More detailed information is available, on a incident per incident basis – no consolidated information, need to go through each report. Information is reported by the hospital usually so detail of records varies.	*In the last several years, only a couple of dog bite cases, these were relatively minor. All have occurred at McInnis park with off-leash use. A couple of complaints when people go to McInnis and see dogs off-leash and have the “fear” factor. Personal experience – have had dogs approach and in most cases owners do not acknowledge that dog is approaching another person, could lead to uncomfortable feelings.	*Rangers do write-up reports if they witness incidents or receive complaints; dog bites handled by local humane society on behalf of open space. Generally, dog bites, occur during both on-leash and off-leash situations; however, very few dog bites occur at all. Issues with harassment and intimidation typically occur with dogs off-leash. Off-leash program is relatively successful since the implementation of the limits on the number of dogs allowed per person (including commercial dog walkers). Biggest issue remains off-leash dogs in places where they are required to be on-leash.	*There are very few reported instances of conflicts on water district lands; could be attributed to leash laws. They have incident reports, would need to go though legal to determine. Estimated only a couple in the last five years. One with a horseback rider being thrown from dogs off-leash, about five years ago. Very infrequent. Get occasional dog/dog conflict and occasional dog/person conflict.	*Dogs are not allowed off-leash; they have not had reported instances of dog bites; other complaints relate primarily to dogs not being on-leash, and dogs hassling other dogs – this is primarily an issue with off-leash dogs. Complaints are entered into the Case Incidence System, but information cannot be retrieved easily.	*Incidents are reported by peace officers, esp. if medical attention is required related to a dog bite, or if other violations occur for which citations were written (e.g., off-leash dogs); State does track incidents but it is unknown how easily the information can be retrieved. Because of the on-leash requirement in state parks, there could be very few reports. These reports would likely contain information about the nature of the incidents (e.g., whether or not dogs were on or off-leash at the time)	*Have records, but do not have them available. Most reports are those that result in injury to a person – don’t really track dog vs. dog incidences. Will be able to provide this database for future use – he is tracking this down but might take a couple of weeks. Dog incidents are few because there are only certain preserves where they are allowed and only one where they are off-leash.	*Records of non-injury incidents are kept by Risk Department in database of ‘aggressive animal reports.’ These reports are kept for dogs and other animals. If an injury is reported, the incident goes to public safety (park police) who filter it back to Risk Department and also notify animal control. Specific information from this database can be provided, if needed.
