SENSITIVE HABITAT
Protect This Butterfly's Future
This area provides habitat for the endangered mission blue butterfly, a butterfly found only in southern Marin County and pockets of open space in San Francisco and San Mateo Counties. You can help preserve this species by staying on the designated trail and not trampling the surrounding plants where the butterfly feeds and lays its eggs.
Stay on trail
Federal regulations require you to keep your dog from disturbing wildlife [36 CFR 12.2]. Pets must be on leash or under your control at all times.

GOLDEN GATE NATIONAL RECREATION AREA

DOG OWNERS

This area is home to many plants and animals that are sensitive to disturbance by dogs. Many visitors to this area seek an experience that is not disrupted by dogs at play.

Federal regulations require you to keep your dog from disturbing wildlife [36 CFR §2.2], or interfering with other park users [36 CFR §2.34].

- Dogs must be under voice control at all times.
- Keep your dog out of the creek.

Help Protect Plovers

Plovers in Jeopardy

In 1993, the Western Snowy Plover was listed as a federally threatened species. Only about 2,000 Western Plovers remain from Washington to Baja California. Plovers need wide, flat, beaches with good visibility of predators, and they return to the same beaches every year. Their decline is due to increased predation, urban development, and intense recreational use.

Plovers on Park Beaches

Snowy Plovers use two sandy beaches in Golden Gate National Recreation Area, Crissy Field and Ocean Beach. From early July through the end of April, Plovers rest and eat—fun for us, but serious work for this tiny bird that must gather critical reserves for travel and breeding. Look for them camouflaged in small depressions above the tide line.

Visitors are welcome to use the beach area close to the water, away from the upper section of the beach where plovers rest.

Plover on Beach.

In the Wildlife Plover Protection Area at Crissy Field you SHOULD:

- Walk your dogs ON LEASH during the seasonal restriction.
- Recreate on the wet sand away from the upper parts of the beach during Plover season.
- Pick up pet litter immediately and dispose of trash properly to avoid attracting predators such as crows and raccoons.
- Leave kelp and driftwood on the beach—these provide resting and feeding areas for the Plovers.
- Call Park Dispatch at (415) 561-5505 if you notice any threats to the Snowy Plover.

YOU play an important role in the recovery of the Western Snowy Plover!
