Artists as Ambassadors

Youth artists (15-17) spend two weeks immersed in the breathtakingly inspiring landscape of Grand Canyon, a place many say is beyond description. This field-based program lets participants discover their creative side while exploring how art can be used for conservation. Professional artists host workshops on a variety of visual and other media.

New and experienced artists will begin their journey soaking in the scenery from high on the North Rim. They'll spend several days floating the Colorado River and letting their inspiration run wild. Finally, the group will return to the South Rim to host a public art exhibit displaying their work.
