Partners Preserving National Historic Landmarks

by Susan Escherich

HISTORIC PRESERVATION AIMS TO make sure people can see, visit, work, or live in real historic places. America's National Historic Landmarks represent nationally important historical trends and events, people's everyday lives and significant accomplishments, and distinctive architectural and engineering designs. These buildings, landscapes, archeological sites, structures, objects, and districts impart information about America's past that helps us understand how we became the nation we are today.

This directory of preservation partners who work together to preserve National Historic Landmarks, was created under a 1998 Challenge Cost Share grant to the National Historic Landmarks Assistance Initiative of the National Park Service and the Mountain/Plains Office of the National Trust for Historic Preservation. Partners include private and public organizations that are national, regional, state and/or local in scope. A chart illustrates those organizations and programs most relevant to the likely needs of National Historic Landmark owners and managers. This Directory is designed to efficiently guide Landmark owners and managers to assistance for their National Historic Landmark.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE at the local level

Generally, the closer to home you look, the more familiar with your Landmark and the programs that can assist your Landmark preservation professionals will be. Begin with your city or county government. Many localities have some sort of architectural design review entity to assist the preservation of historic resources. Sometimes your local government may employ a preservation planner, and in many instances, your community may have a comprehensive preservation program.

Design review is generally carried out by a board of professionals familiar with the historic character of historic properties in your area, such as a local historic district or a National Historic Landmark district. This board should be able to guide you in preserving the historic character of your National Historic Landmark. While National Historic Landmark status does not ensure financial assistance, National Historic Landmark status may lead to greater attention, which may lead to financial assistance.

throughout the state

If your National Historic Landmark is located in a Heritage Area, Heritage Area staff may also be able to advise you on programs to assist you in guidance or financing. For more information, visit www.ncrc.nps.gov/heritage/.

The State Historic Preservation Office (SHPO) or Tribal Historic Preservation Office (THPO) is the next level of public assistance you should consider. These agencies carry out the national public preservation program within the states and tribal areas. SHPOs and THPOs will know their State and Tribal legislation, local sources of assistance, and regional as well as national sources of assistance. They provide assistance in designating National Historic Landmarks and are the initial point of contact for advice on using tax credits to help finance rehabilitation of certified historic properties. Addresses, phone numbers, and e:mail addresses for SHPOs and THPOs are available on the web from the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation www.achp.gov and the National Conference of State Historic Preservation Officers www.sso.org/ncshpo/shpolist.htm.

The National Park Service is dedicated to conserving unimpaired the natural and cultural resources of the National Park System for the enjoyment, education and inspiration of this and future generations.

The Service is also responsible for managing a great variety of national and international programs designed to help extend the benefits of natural and cultural resource conservation and outdoor recreation throughout this country and the world.

The National Trust for Historic Preservation, chartered by Congress in 1949, is a private, nonprofit organization dedicated to protecting the irreplaceable. It fights to save historic buildings and the neighborhoods and landscapes they anchor. Through education and advocacy, the National Trust is revitalizing communities across the country and challenges citizens to create sensible plans for the future. It has six regional offices, 20 historic sites, and works with thousands of local community groups nationwide.

The National Park Service (NPS) administers the Federal preservation program, including the National Register of Historic Places, the National Historic Landmarks Program, and the Historic Rehabilitation Tax Credit Program. The Park Service produces guidelines for reating historic character and methods for maintaining authenticity. Publications and guidelines are available on the NPS cultural resources website, <www.cr.nps.gov>. The National Park Service has eight offices in cities throughout the US to assist you. For more information visit <www.cr.nps.gov/nhl>.

PRIVATE ASSISTANCE

local, statewide, and national

Local friends groups supporting a historic resource in your community, even if it is not designated as a National Historic Landmark, may have useful information about local preservation assistance.

Many states have statewide historic preservation organizations. These are non-profit groups that educate communities and local government about the value of historic preservation and can help stewards – owners and managers of National Historic Landmarks – advocate for these nationally significant resources.

The National Trust for Historic Preservation (NTHP) is a private, non-profit national organization promoting historic preservation. The National Trust works to save historic buildings, neighborhoods and landscapes and has a national center and regional offices that administer its programs. For more information about the programs of the National Trust, visit them online, <www.nthp.org>.

HISTORIC PRESERVATION IS A PROCESS OF STEPS DESIGNED TO PROTECT SIGNIFICANT CULTURAL RESOURCES FOR THE benefit of future generations. Research, survey and identification, registration, documentation and evaluation lead to preservation planning, to treating, using, and interpreting historic places, and to managing museum collections for education, exhibitions, and research. Each part of the National Park Service's Cultural Resource programs represents one or more of those steps toward the goal of preserving and protecting America's historic resources. In its Cultural Resource programs, the National Park Service focuses on working cooperatively with its partners and provides guidance and assistance in preserving the nation's cultural heritage. It serves national parks and partners including State and Tribal historic preservation offices, certified local governments and the public. The address for the National Park Service's Cultural Resource programs is: 1849 C Street, NW, Room NC 350, Washington, DC 20240. Visit the NPS cultural resource programs website <www.cr.nps.gov>. The following programs and publications are described at this website. Publications are available from the Government Printing Office or by calling 202.343.9583.
