What J.F.K. Means to Me

J.F.K. was a brave and honest man. He set a great example for others. His bravery led him to a great future. J.F.K's family tried to help him in any way that they could.

J.F.K. had 8 brothers and sisters: Eunice, Rosemary, Jean, Ted, Joe Jr., Patricia, Robert and Kathleen. J.F.K.'s mother, Rose had very high expectations for all of her children. Everyday she would bring the other members of the family to church. One day she told J.F.K to go into church and pray for his family, instead he prayed for two dogs. His father, Joseph wanted his oldest son, Joe Jr. to be the first Cathdic president of the United states, but when Joe's plane exploded and in a war and Joe died, Joseph told J.F.K., the second oldest boy that he was going to become the president. He taught each boy to be very competitive, Josheph said "Second place is not good enough." J.F.K. worked hard for many years and then finally he did just what his father wanted, he became the first Catholic president of the United states. He ran against a man named Richard Nixon, and all of his brothers and sisters helped him campaign. J.F.K. was the 35th president of the United states, and a little while later, Jacqueline Bouvier married J.F.K. and not only became J.F.K.'s wife, but became first lady.

One lesson my family taught me that was similar to J.F.K. is about how to handle hard parts of my life, like when my Grandpa died and when Joe, J.F.K.'s brother died. J.F.K. and I are alike because we have both dealt with hard parts of our lives. J.F.K. has taught me that life is what you make it. This message is important because it teaches you if you if you choose for life to be happy, then you can make life happy.
