John John F. Kennedy was sick as a boy so he spent his time reading and writing. Once he was sick he published a book called Why England Slept and the book became a best selling novel. J.F.K wanted to become a teacher or a writer but he never knew he would become the first Catholic President of the United State of America. J.F.K. first became congressman then Senator then he ran for President. J.F.K had many great experiences that helped him be a good P President.

What helped J.F.K. become a good President? One experience was when he was in the navy. This helped him because he started to make the right decision or not. On the PT 109 he decided to help his burnt man live. J.F.K. childhood also gave him experiences to make him a good President. He learned to say yes or no to his brothers games, like riding into each other

J.F.K. taught me that we should make the right decision even when we are young and old. J.F.K. wants us to be respectful to others.
