

What J.F.K. Means to Me

Jedhi Lee

May 18th, 2010

John F. Kennedy was a person who had a mind full of imagination, and a heart that never gave up. He made many amazing accomplishments throughout his life. He helped people, worked with people, and he was determined at all the things he wanted to finish.

One famous accomplishment John F. Kennedy made during his lifetime being president was to send the first American man to the moon. First, the Soviet Union in Russia flew the first satellite to space. Then, the Soviet Union sent the first man to space. That didn't make John F. Kennedy give up his hope. Still, nobody had sent the first man to the moon. John F. Kennedy wanted the United States of America to be the first country to send a man to the moon. Other people disagreed with John F. Kennedy's idea. They said it was too dangerous. John F. Kennedy convinced people that he was right. A few years later John F. Kennedy was assassinated, the Apollo 11 with Neil Armstrong was sent to the moon. Neil Armstrong stepped on the moon and brought a moonstone to earth. John F. Kennedy's dream came true.

I respect John F. Kennedy and will become a person with a strong heart. J.F.K. and I are alike because we both have a lot of imagination and we don't give up work we want to finish. I have learned to stand up for myself and to trust what I believe I can do. I care about John F. Kennedy because he was helpful, courageous, hopeful, and a great leader.

