

Bioremediation: using biological organisms such as bacteria with special enzymes (link) or species with special characteristics to clean up or speed up processes. Bioremediation may include using plants to absorb toxins from contaminated soil, then disposing of the plants, using microbes that metabolize inorganic solids such as arsenic and convert it to other forms that may be less toxic or neutral.