

Mangrove swamps are another saltwater wetland that occurs in tropical regions, including Florida. The specialized roots of these trees block salt absorption and provide air to the roots acting like snorkels.