Welcome to the Copper Country

Welcome to Keweenaw National Historical Park (NHP) and the Keweenaw Peninsula of Michigan! The park lies within the current and ancestral homelands of the Ojibwa people. Here, the stories of people and copper have been intertwined for more than 7,000 years. Indigenous Peoples mined, used, and traded copper across North America for thousands of years before European explorers learned of the abundant pure copper deposits.

By the mid to late 1800s the area became one of the first industrial mining hubs in the United States, attracting immigrants from around the world. Vibrant communities and commercial centers grew to support the mines. Companies provided schools, churches, libraries, and other amenities to support the workers, management, and their families. The copper produced here brought America through two world wars and provided necessary raw material for electrification and industrialization.

Over time, mining companies took advantage of technological advancements to cut costs in extraction and processing of copper. This, paired with changing economic and social conditions, sparked a response from labor, including worker strikes. Over time, as companies moved west and communities declined, some families moved on while others adapted to the post-mining economy.

NPS Photos

By the 1970s, our nation began to recognize the significance of its disappearing industrial history. Local and national organizations moved to preserve the places and stories associated with the Copper Country. In 1992, Congress created Keweenaw NHP to work “in partnership with public and private entities to preserve the nationally significant historical and cultural sites, structures and districts of the Keweenaw Peninsula” and to “interpret the historical geological, archaeological, cultural, technological and corporate forces that relate to the story of copper.”

We hope that you will experience and explore these stories and places for yourself. Journey to a time when “copper was king,” experience the beauty and history of the Keweenaw, and make your own memories that will last a lifetime.

2025 Park Programs

Ranger Guided Tours, Programs, & Demonstrations

Ranger programs in downtown Calumet start at the Calumet Visitor Center, last about 1 hour, and cover approximately 1 mile. Water and sunscreen are recommended. In the event of inclement weather or staffing shortages, programs will be canceled.

Please visit the Calumet Visitor Center information desk, check the park’s calendar of events at go.nps.gov/KEWCalendar, or follow our social media pages to get the latest schedule of tours, programs, demonstrations, and events.

Junior Ranger and Junior Ranger Explorer Programs

Are you ready to begin your Junior Ranger adventure? Keweenaw NHP offers two different booklets full of activities designed to help you enjoy and learn about the park. The Junior Ranger Explorer program is geared toward children 4-6 and the Junior Ranger Program is designed for ages 7 and older. All ages can participate in either activity book. Free books are available at the Calumet Visitor Center or online at go.nps.gov/KeweenawJuniorRanger.

Turn in completed books to the visitor center where a ranger will swear you in, sign your certificate, and present you with your official sticker or badge. Completed books can also be mailed to:

Or email them to: kewe_information@nps.gov.

Make an Impact! Be a Volunteer!

Michigan’s nationally significant copper mining history is preserved and interpreted by Keweenaw NHP and its 22 Keweenaw Heritage Site partners. It’s a lot of work to keep these locations open to the public. Much of that work is shouldered by fantastic volunteers across the Copper Country.

Volunteering is a great way to meet new people, share your talents, and develop your skills. Whether they’re in the archives, museum collections, visitor center, or out in the field – volunteers help make an impact in the community and beyond.

Are you interested in volunteering for the park or one of its many heritage sites? Learn more about available volunteer opportunities at go.nps.gov/KNHPVolunteer.

If you only have a day or two free, join one of our volunteer workdays! This year, our workdays are scheduled for: June 7, June 21, July 23, August 2, September 27.

Essential Information

Calumet Visitor Center

The Calumet Visitor Center is located at 98 Fifth Street in downtown Calumet at the corner of 5th Street and Red Jacket Road. It provides information on the many Heritage Sites to visit in the area, as well as 3 floors of exhibits, a park film, and an Isle Royale & Keweenaw Parks Association bookstore that sells books, gifts, clothing, and more. Contact the Calumet Visitor Center at 906-483-3176 for more information.

Get the NPS Mobile App!

The NPS Mobile App has tools to explore more than 400 national parks nationwide. Find interactive maps, tours of park places, on-the-ground accessibility information, and much more to plan your national park adventures before and during your trip.
Keweenaw NHP features include self-guided tours of both the Quincy and Calumet Units. The free app is currently available for iOS and Android devices.

Access this QR Code with your phone's camera or visit go.nps.gov/NPS-APP to download the app.

Accessibility

The Calumet Visitor Center and exhibits accommodate many accessiblity needs.

- wheelchair available for use
- braille park brochures
- interactive discovery area

To learn more about park
accessibility features, ask park
staff or visit:
go.nps.gov/KEWEAccessibility.

Many of the Keweenaw Heritage Sites also offer accessible features. Contact each site for specific information.

Weather

No matter the season, it is best to know the current weather forecast. Both summer and winter can be unpredictable and storms can emerge without warning. Remember to dress accordingly and bring plenty of water and sunscreen for a pleasant visit.

Safety

Dial 9-1-1 for Emergencies. Be prepared to give your location.
You should report fires, accidents,
or life-threatening emergencies.

Some areas within the park or Heritage Sites are considered remote, possibly without cell phone service. You may have to find the nearest land line to call 9-1-1.

Connectivity

Some areas have limited or spotty cellular phone and data service. Please plan accordingly.
The NPS Mobile App and park
information can be downloaded for offline use prior to arrival.

Research

The Keweenaw History Center (Park Archives) is open to researchers and scholars by prior appointment. Please call 906-483-3032 for more information.

Pets

Pets are allowed in many outdoor areas around park sites;
however they are not permitted inside park buildings. Service animals, as defined by law, are welcome in all park buildings.
Please pick up after your pets.

Lodging & Food

Visit Keweenaw provides information about lodging and food in the area. Contact them at 906-337-4579 or online at www.visitkeweenaw.com.

Passenger Carrying Buses

While bus parking is permitted in the parking area next to the Calumet Visitor Center, it is strongly suggested that buses offload passengers and park elsewhere. Buses may not idle;
engines must be shut down
when the bus is not underway to prevent the accumulation of exhaust fumes in the area.

Recreational Opportunities

A variety of hiking trails,
museums, heritage centers,
lighthouses, guided or self-guided tours, geocaching opportunities, and more await visitors. For a full list of opportunities, visit go.nps.gov/Keweenaw2Do.

The use of bicycles and ebikes is permitted on established routes on park-owned lands within the Quincy and Calumet Unit Boundaries.

The use of bicycles and ebikes on established routes on non-federal property within the park boundary are governed by prevailing state, county, township or village laws and ordinances, and postings by private land owners.

A bike rack is provided at the
Calumet Visitor Center.

Keweenaw NHP - A New Kind of National Park

When the U.S. Congress established Keweenaw National Historical Park on October 27, 1992, it created a new kind of park that involved the public in a new way. This would be a partnership park, with responsibilities for preservation and storytelling shared between the National Park Service and local organizations.
Most national parks begin with the purchase of land (the National Park Service then owns and manages the land and other resources for the benefit of the American people, according to its own policies and practices). This park was going to be different.

With passionate leadership from Senator Carl Levin and Representative Bob Davis, Congress created a park designed to keep federal land ownership to a minimum.
A great experiment began – would it be possible to preserve and interpret the story of this place without substantial federal ownership? Could the federal government successfully partner with local citizens and others to achieve the purpose of the park and the mission of the National Park Service? How would it work?

Congress created an Advisory Commission of seven members, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to operate in support of the park's activities and to act when needed as a conduit between the park and its partners. Together, the commission and the park provide grants, recommendations, and other technical assistance to Keweenaw Heritage Sites and local organizations.

Our success in preserving and interpreting the history of the Keweenaw depends on working together, sharing resources, and learning from each other. So far, it's been 32 years of partnership and experimentation. How do you think we are doing?

*Keweenaw NHP is made up of many parts that represent government and community members. Each part is essential.
If you remove any one part of the partnerships, the work would be much more difficult to complete.*

Sculptures on Quincy Hill

Returning a Sense of People to the Landscape

For many years, visitors have marveled at the industrial history preserved in the mining landscapes of the Keweenaw. The ruins can evoke a sense of abandonment and isolation. But when the mines were in operation, these were bustling places – they were places of work and commerce and home. We wondered, how could that be conveyed to park visitors?

During the summer of 2024, the park worked in cooperation with Isle Royale and Keweenaw Parks Association and Keweenaw National Historical Park Advisory Commission to find an artist to help. Together, they commissioned artist Kasey Koski to bring back a sense of the people who once lived and worked on the landscape. Ms. Koski worked with the team to develop the concept – four life-size sculptures representing miners and their families. They selected the Quincy Dry House ruins site as the location for the sculptures.

NPS Photos

Every good sized mine had at least one Dry House. It was the place where workers prepared for work in the morning, and washed up before returning home at night (until the 1920s or later, most homes did not have running water or baths of the type we have today). Near the ruins of the Quincy Dry House are the foundations of the workers’ homes. This was an ideal place to capture both home and work life.

The Dry House Ruins are across Highway 41 from the Quincy Shaft Rock House. As you near the Quincy Mine Site. Turn onto No.2 Road and take the first left. The dirt road leads to a parking lot. From there it is a short walk on an uneven gravel trail to the Dry House and an overview of the entire Quincy landscape, including Portage Lake.

Closest to the parking lot is a silhouette of a woman and her child looking out into the distance. What do you think they might be looking at? They are standing next to the foundations a company house. It is one of many that were built on this hillside. If you look carefully you can see where the other company houses once stood in this area.

Walls and foundations of a larger building can be found close by, the ruins of the Dry House. Near the door to this building is a miner waving. Do you imagine him ready to start a day or happy to have finished one safe and sound?

Inside is another miner, washing up at a basin. Have you experienced anything like a dry house in your lifetime? What can you tell about the lives of the miners from this silhouette and the building it is in?

Closest to the highway, the largest sculpture depicts three miners walking together. The silhouettes of the three men represent all Quincy mine workers, their many countries of origin and their varied life stories. They stand near a path that was worn into the landscape by hundreds of miners walking back and forth to the mine. Can you see traces of that trail today?

Artist Kasey Koski drew her inspiration for the sculpture from Giuseppe, Giovanni, and Ferdinando Fasana, three brothers who immigrated from Italy to work in the booming mine at Quincy near the turn of the twentieth century. She discovered information about the brothers while conducting research in the Michigan Tech Archives to prepare for the work. As she explored their stories, she found that Ferdinando and Giovanni were killed in separate instances of falling rock within the mines two among dozens of fatalities due the dangerous conditions underground, leaving Giuseppe the only surviving brother. Their story inspired her to depict two of the men in shadow, and one with light shining through.

The land around the Quincy mine was a vibrant and thriving, populated by people similar to those reflected in the silhouettes that now stand here. What do you think it would have been like to live so close to a working mine? Imagine the soundscape that people living and working here experienced and compare it to the noise around you today. Immerse yourself in the history of the area and try to visualize how it shaped what you see in the Keweenaw today.

When visiting, please remain courteous and respectful of this valuable historic landscape. Follow Leave No Trace principles, leave historic objects as you see them, and do not climb on the ruins.

Support Your Public Lands

Isle Royale & Keweenaw Parks Association

The Isle Royale & Keweenaw Parks Association (IRKPA) is a non-profit bookstore, publisher, educator and supporter of Isle Royale National Park and Keweenaw National Historical Park. IRKPA’s mission is to promote an understanding of, appreciation for, and enjoyment of these two parks. By educating the public about these parks, they help to protect and preserve them for future generations.

To accomplish their mission, IRKPA:

- Operates bookstores at each park as well as an online store.
- Publishes educational books, videos, and posters about the parks.
- Promotes a variety of free publications, such as the park newspapers and visitor guides.
- Offers a variety of adult workshops and research grants.
- Contributes financial support and services to its partner parks.

IRKPA’s work is undertaken with generous contributions from members and donors, as well as income earned from bookstores sales and other sources. Consider becoming a member and learn more at www.irkpa.org.

Keweenaw National Historical Park Advisory Commission

The Keweenaw National Historical Park Advisory Commission was established along with the park by an Act of Congress on October 27, 1992. This commission serves at the request of the Secretary of the Interior. The Advisory Commission provides leadership, education, and financial support for the protection, preservation, and interpretation of resources related to the story of copper mining on Michigan’s Keweenaw Peninsula.

The goals of the Advisory Commission are to:

- Advise the National Park Service at Keweenaw NHP on park planning, preservation, interpretation, and operational matters.
- Develop the Keweenaw Heritage Sites Program into a consortium of fully sustainable sites.
- Develop partnerships that provide visitors with a cohesive, accessible, and engaging national park experience along the entire length of the Keweenaw.
- Promote a historic preservation ethic and emphasize heritage awareness.
- Enhance appreciation of the historic resources in the park, surrounding areas, and on the Keweenaw Peninsula.

Learn more about how the Keweenaw National Historical Park Advisory Commission and Keweenaw NHP work together at go.nps.gov/commission.

National Parks of Lake Superior Foundation

The National Parks of Lake Superior Foundation (NPLSF) is the philanthropic partner of the five national parks of Lake Superior. They inspire people to create meaningful connections with our parks by providing funding for programming, educational initiatives, and outreach efforts.

Work NPLSF does to support the parks is funded through grants and private donations. Consider becoming a member and learn more about NPLSF at www.npls.org.

Places to Visit

Are you ready to see more amazing places all connected by our collective copper story? The 22 Keweenaw Heritage Sites are official partners of Keweenaw NHP. Each site interprets and preserves an important aspect of the areas' copper mining history and provides a unique visitor experience. Visiting Calumet

Along the streets of Calumet, visitors can discover the interactions of many historical forces at play, including social, ethnic, commercial, and paternalistic practices. In Calumet, Keweenaw National Historical Park and its partners tell the stories of an immigrant and migrant mining community and its influences on the past and present.

Calumet National Historic Landmark District

At the center of the unit is the Calumet National Historic Landmark District. Visitors can take part in self-guided walking tours of the downtown or the industrial core, or accompany a Keweenaw NHP ranger on a guided tour.

Places to visit include the Calumet Visitor Center, the Keweenaw Heritage Center, Coppertown USA Mining Museum, Copper Country Firefighters History Museum, the Calumet Theatre, and the Italian Hall Memorial Park. The park headquarters and Keweenaw History Center (both formerly Calumet & Hecla Mining Company-owned buildings) are also located nearby.

For tour information, ask a ranger at the visitor center, visit go.nps.gov/KEWECalendar, or call ahead at 906-483-3176.

Visiting Quincy

A visit to the Quincy Unit of Keweenaw National Historical Park rewards the visitor with above and below ground experiences. Designated a National Historic Landmark District in 1989, the National Park Service and Quincy Mine Hoist Association partner to offer a variety of experiences. Quincy Mine Tours provides guided tours of the underground mine and hoist house, along with self-guided tours of the #2 shaft-rockhouse. Outside exploration of the site is free and open to the public. At the Quincy Dry House Ruins, visitors can view new art that depicts the lives of miners and their families.

Quincy Smelting Works

Also contained within the Quincy Unit, along the Portage Lake shoreline just east of the lift bridge, is the Quincy Smelting Works. As the only remaining industrial site of its type left in the world, the Quincy Smelter provides an exceptional opportunity to learn about the machinery, processes, and workers that made Michigan's copper industry so important to our nation.

Visitors can tour the smelting complex seasonally by contacting Quincy Mine Tours Gift Shop at 906-482-3101. The Quincy Smelter is owned by the Keweenaw NHP Advisory Commission and operated by heritage site partner Quincy Mine Hoist Association.
