

Primitive Skills for Postmodern People

Thursday, February 16
at 7:00 PM

Fort George
+ Public House
Lovell Building

1483 Duane St.
Astoria, OR

Explore your inner caveman (or cavewoman) by connecting with skills your Stone Age ancestors would recognize.

Utilizing his own hand-made tools, primitive skills expert Aaron Webster will delve into fire-starting, flint knapping, and string making, and connect us all to the timeless skill of using objects found in nature to help you and those you love to survive and thrive. Webster manages the Lewis & Clark Interpretive Center at Cape Disappointment in Washington, and his talk is part of the Nature Matters series, a lively look at the intersection of nature and culture.

Doors will open at 6 p.m. for those wanting to purchase beverages and food at the George before the free public event.

Nature Matters:
Where Nature & Culture Intersect

Follow us on Facebook