PREFACE

The Finding Aid for the Reverend Samuel Longfellow (1819-1892) Papers, 1792-1963 (bulk dates: 1835-1894), describes the papers of the clergyman and hymnist, Samuel Longfellow, the youngest sibling of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. The collection consists of approximately 12.5 linear feet of journals, correspondence, sermons, poetry, and other related materials. Staff at the Northeast Services Museum Center (NMSC) processed these papers.

The cataloguer would like to express thanks towards the Longfellow National Historic Site (LONG) staff, particularly to Jim Shea, Site Manager and David Daly, Acting Curator. Special thanks go to Anita Israel, Archives Specialist, who shared not only her extensive knowledge of the Reverend but also the research conducted by two scholars, Mr. Joseph Abdo and Ms. Sally Sapienza, contained in the growing vertical file folder related to Longfellow at LONG.
RESTRICTIONS

The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted materials. The Privacy Act of 1974 (5 United States Code 552a) governs the use of materials that document private individuals, groups and corporations.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a reproduction if the document does not infringe the privacy rights of an individual, group or corporation. These specified conditions of authorized use include:

- non-commercial and non-profit study, scholarship, research or teaching
- criticism or commentary
- as a NPS preservation or security copy for research use
- as a research copy for deposit in another institution

If the researcher later uses a copy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," the researcher is personally liable for copyright, privacy, or publicity infringement and agrees to indemnify the NPS from any legal action as a result of the error. Permission to obtain a photographic, xerographic, digital or other copy of a document does not indicate permission to publish, exhibit, perform, reproduce, sell, distribute or prepare derivative works from the document without permission from the copyright holder and from any private individual, group or corporation shown or otherwise recorded.

Permission to publish, exhibit, perform, reproduce, prepare derivative works from, sell or otherwise distribute the item must be obtained separately in writing from the holder of the original copyright (or if the creator is dead from his/her heirs) as well as from any individual(s), groups or corporations whose name, image, recorded words or private information (e.g. employment information) may be reproduced in the source material. The holder of the original copyright is not necessarily the National Park Service. The National Park Service is not legally liable for copyright, privacy or publicity infringement when materials are wrongfully used after being provided to researchers for "fair use."

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copying order if fulfillment of the order is judged in violation of copyright or federal or state privacy or publicity law. This institution also places restrictions on the use of cameras, photocopiers and scanners in the research room.
INTRODUCTION

The Reverend Samuel Longfellow Papers document the life of a prominent “second generation” Transcendentalist thinker. Longfellow’s writings, including his sermons and the hymns he wrote and compiled, reveal the religious philosophy typical of a small but influential group active in the mid-nineteenth century. His family life, including the times he spent with his brother Henry’s family in their Cambridge home, the current site of LONG known at that time as the Craigie House, is often described in his letters.

Most of the papers belong to the accession LONG-1, the materials present in the house when the National Park Service took possession of the site in 1972. A family member, possibly Alice Longfellow (1850-1928), gathered together the journals and correspondence to and from Longfellow after his death on which Joseph May based the biography Memoirs and Letters. These materials remained in the Craigie House. Later on, either his niece Lucia Longfellow Barrett (1859-1940) or niece Mary King Longfellow (1852-1945) gave to the Longfellow House archives additional materials belonging to their branch of the family. Family historian and curator of the Longfellow House archives, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana, added a small amount of materials including notebooks from Longfellow’s undergraduate career which he purchased from an antiques dealer in Maine. Letters to a young artist friend, Harry Wilson Barnitz (1864-1916), were donated to the LONG archives by a relative of Barnitz and form accession LONG-86.

LONG staff in the 1970s and 1980s found the Samuel Longfellow papers in the basement vault and in the attic and rehoused them. Henry Dana had previously removed letters from prominent individuals and placed them in his own papers; otherwise he and his assistants arranged only the correspondence as the rest of the papers appeared in considerable disorder before the current project. In 2001, Jennifer Lyons, then the Sociey for the Preservation of New England Antiquities/ National Park Service archivist at NMSC, identified the materials to be processed as the Reverend Samuel Longfellow Papers as part of a multi-phase cataloguing project of the LONG archives. NPS Archivist Margaret Welch catalogued these papers at the NMSC facilities at the Charlestown Navy Yard from December 2004 to July 2005. The project was carried out under the guidance of David Vecchioli, Regional Archivist, NMSC. During this project the NMSC was administered by Sara Wolf, Director and Giles Parker, Deputy Director. Fiscal year 2005 Backlog Cataloging moneys funded the project.

The papers were arranged into series and rehoused into acid-free folders and archival boxes. All paper clips, staples, and other metal fasteners were removed, and particularly acidic materials

1 It is known that Lucia gave a small portion of the correspondence she and her family received to the Longfellow House in June 1940 (see Notebook of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana (hereafter cited as HWLD) in Box 23, Folder 28).
2 See correspondence between HWLD and Fred Rouleau, Box 24, Folder 9.
such as newsprint clippings and dried flora were separated from other materials with a separation sheet to cross-reference their original location. Separation sheets were likewise created for oversize and photographic materials.

SERIES DESCRIPTIONS

The Reverend Samuel Longfellow Papers are divided into eighteen series. Throughout the collection, items have been removed as dictated by form or content. Separation sheets are inserted in the location from which an item was removed, and copies of the separation sheets are stored with the removed item itself.

Series I. Diaries and Journals

Arranged chronologically in most cases.

Longfellow kept diaries in which he recorded intimate feelings. He destroyed most of these diaries, but one, “Private Journal in Cambridge,” is extant in which he speaks of his “infatuation” with “Willie Winter.”

Most of his travel journals are small notebooks in which he jotted down his itinerary and descriptions of the environs. His pencil drawings of buildings and scenery complement his text entries.

Series II. Correspondence

A. Outgoing

Arranged chronologically in most cases.

Because Longfellow family members deposited their letters from the Reverend in the Craigie House for its archives, much of this correspondence is addressed to his parents, his sister Mary after her 1839 marriage, and his sister Anne who in turn communicated to him news of his Portland, Maine relatives. Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana purchased a few letters from dealers and acquired photostats of letters from other repositories.

4 Transcriptions of several of these journals are available in the LONG archives.
5 “Private Journal At Cambridge,” Entry for 28 January 1838, Box 1, Folder 2. In a 29 June 1882 letter to the Rev. A.M. Haskell, the Rev. Samuel Longfellow (hereafter cited as the Rev. SL) said, “I have not the exact dates of Mr. Johnson’s ministry at Harrison Square, having destroyed my Journals of that time – but I should say it is fully twenty five or thirty” (Box 6, Folder 4).
6 See also Appendix “Index to Correspondents.”
7 Most of his letters to Henry Wadsworth Longfellow (hereafter cited as HWL) are in Letters to HWL, bMSAm1340.2-1340.7, Houghton Library.
Longfellow explains in his family letters his daily routine and surroundings when at his pastorates in Fall River, Brooklyn, and Germantown. He tells his Portland family of his new nephews and niece and his work in the new garden during his stay at Craigie House in Cambridge with his brother Henry’s family from 1844 to 1846. Several letters in later years also mention activities at the Craigie House.

On his extended travels to Europe and his beloved White Mountains, he frequently extols the beauty of the landscapes. He does not explain to his family his support for the abolition of slavery, temperance, and women’s rights but does briefly mention his participation in meetings. His beliefs are clearly expressed in his letters of condolence to grieving relatives. As he told his sister-in-law Fanny upon the death of her baby daughter in September 1848:

As at the bidding of this messenger of God, the little one has unclasped her hand from yours and passed alone within the veil, has it not in opening to receive her, given you a glimpse of the Holy of Holies full of the presence of God. Is not the veil henceforth more transparent between you & the spiritual world, that world which is not afar, but all about us waiting only for our eyes to be pure enough to behold it.

His fellow Harvard Divinity graduate and colleague Samuel Johnson (1822-1882) is the other major recipient (Longfellow probably retrieved these letters when he was writing a posthumous memoir of Johnson). The compilation and publication of various editions of their two hymn books is frequently discussed. These letters also reveal his development as a religious leader. He candidly tells Johnson of his misgivings concerning his calling as a young man and wonders if he has the energy and ability to serve a parish. He, like Johnson, moved from the tenets of Unitarianism to a “freer” religion in which no one denomination was followed: he writes that his Germantown congregation was “used to very free preaching” and so chose him as their minister. Upon Johnson’s death, he was asked to characterize his sermons. This affectionate description of his longtime friend indicates Longfellow’s belief in the preacher’s role as well:

It was the Emmanuel, God with us, and when he uttered its prophecies or warnings, it was with the look & accent of one, who believed that he had been closeted with the Most High & had his message to report, which he

9 In particular, the Rev. SL helped out with the garden at Craigie House (Box 3, Folder 8, Spring 1848).

10 Recovering from illness, the Rev. SL went to “the Woman’s Right Convention in New York just for a couple of hours” (Letter to Anne Longfellow Pierce (hereafter cited as ALP), 27 Nov 1856, Box 5, Folder 2).

did with the simplicity & veracity and sweet audacity of a loving child, uttering his father’s words.\textsuperscript{13}

\textbf{B. Incoming}

Arranged alphabetically by correspondent’s surname and chronologically therein.

Many of the extant letters to the Reverend Samuel relate to his life as a clergyman. The correspondence gives insights into the mechanics of parish operations with many letters discussing arrangements for one clergyman to substitute for another on a Sunday. Not many delve into lengthy theological discussions, but in one case the minister and writer Samuel Osgood, after discussing such an exchange of pulpits, explains a comprehensive vision of “Liberal Christians [who have] more in common with each other than the champions of total depravity & everlasting torment [who] have our Right, Left & Centre.”\textsuperscript{14}

The approximately one hundred letters from his close friend Samuel Johnson give insights into Johnson’s own life and his journey towards “free religion.” He, like Longfellow, keenly sympathized with the abolitionists and other reform movements and spoke out during his sermons. He advised Longfellow to do the same – “[T]hunder away against war & Slavery – Sam, we cannot speak too strongly, nor cannot rouse men too much. They need a tremendous shaking most of them…”\textsuperscript{15} He, too, was absorbed in editing and publishing their hymnbooks and persevered despite challenges such as misprints like “Thy praise shall sound from shore to snore!!! How unfortunate.”\textsuperscript{16}

Several soldiers during the Civil War such as Daniel Ackley wrote to thank Longfellow for the newspapers he sent to them and gave accounts of their life in the field. Longfellow thoughtfully corresponded with young boys such as John Lindley and “King” Putnam for several years. Letters from young artists such as Stephen Wilson Van Schaick, William H. Hodges, and Wyatt Eaton demonstrate Longfellow provided moral support and purchased their works.

The gaps in dates and sporadic nature of the correspondence indicate that Longfellow did not collect all of his incoming correspondence. He moved his belongings to various residences throughout his life and so left or discarded

\textsuperscript{13} To Rev. A.M. Haskell, 29 June 1882
\textsuperscript{14} Letter to the Rev. SL, 19 March 1858, Box 8, Folder 10. Osgood is discussing a controversy raised by letters published in his magazine the \textit{Christian Inquirer}.
\textsuperscript{15} Johnson, Letter to the Rev. SL, 10 July 1847, Box 8, Folder 1.
\textsuperscript{16} Johnson, Letter to the Rev. SL, 27 June 1847, Box 8, Folder 1.
letters. Thus, only a few letters from suffragists like Lucy Stone, Native American activists like Helen Hunt Jackson, and transcendentalist philosophers such as Ralph Waldo Emerson, and Bronson Alcott are in this collection. Only two letters from the journalist Morton Fullerton, who accompanied Longfellow to France in 1888, exist.

Series III. Religious Writings

Religious Writings

In the beginning of his career, Longfellow found writing sermons “hard work” and later on described the feeling of ideas eluding him before he could put them on paper. Despite these feelings of inadequacy, he wrote the many sermons required by his duties as a minister. He also wrote articles for the Free Religious Association’s publication, The Radical. Themes such as God as the all-pervading spirit and ethics run through the sermons, articles, and notes.

Arranged chronologically unless otherwise noted.

A. Sermons

During his last year at Harvard Divinity School, Longfellow created compositions to be presented orally to his professors. Thus he was prepared to give sermons while traveling as a candidate to various parishes such as West Cambridge and Newburyport, Massachusetts. In his first two jobs at West Cambridge and Fall River, he was required to give two different sermons on Sundays and so was compelled to produce many sermons.

The physical evidence of the manuscripts indicates how he developed his sermons. In the 1840s he wrote out every word to be delivered. By 1849 he developed enough confidence in his speaking ability that he could express thoughts with briefer notes. The sermon manuscripts show short phrases to trigger his thoughts alternating with fully developed paragraphs. He continually revised the sermons in this collection and so crossed out sections and inserted new thoughts. He also wrote the dates and various locations he delivered the sermons so he would not repeat the sermon to the same audience.

It appears that he himself culled the sermons during his lifetime. He apparently discarded many of the early Fall River sermons probably because his style and views changed with the years. He gave many of these sermons more than once, 17 “[Writing sermons] is hard work … I have little power of expression,” Letter to Samuel Johnson, 10 January 1846, Box 3, Folder 2.

18 Letter to Samuel Johnson, 29 March 1849, Box 4, Folder 1.
and they so indicate some of his favorite themes. Disliking “doctrinal sermons" explicating formal creeds, Longfellow instead dwells on the broader themes like the relationship between the individual and God and the “natural” rules such as “love thy neighbor,” truth, and honesty.

Current events and daily behavior are discussed as flowing from these issues: Longfellow states in a 1856 revision to a 1848 sermon that slavery is a “practical denial of human brotherhood” and would have been condemned by Jesus.\(^\text{19}\) He echoes his speeches on women’s rights in a 4 July 1880 sermon: “I cannot doubt that the logic of thought will show itself in the logic of events and that the time is coming when women will serve their country by their vote.”\(^\text{20}\) He embraces the broad concept of evolution as showing a “Divine progressive creation” and manifesting “a creative mind”: “Imperfect & crude & rude forms continually extinguished & left behind as more perfect ones appear.”\(^\text{21}\)

His Brooklyn parish published three of his sermons of which he and they felt particularly proud. Likewise, his Germantown parish published several of his sermons for distribution to a larger audience.

B. Services

This sub-series includes a few examples of marriage vows and blessings. The readings given at the funerals of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and his siblings are also present.

C. Notes

These notes are comprised of research materials Longfellow drew from the books he studied and his own thoughts, even pages from sermons he otherwise discarded. They show the range of interests he incorporated into his sermons such as art, music, and appreciation of the natural world. They also indicate his study of world religions like Buddhism and Hinduism probably inspired by his friend Samuel Johnson, author of the series Oriental Religions.

D. Articles

The Radical articles cogently explain Longfellow’s ideal for religious thought freed from formal doctrine, biblical interpretation, and interdenominational strife. In “Some Radical Doctrines” he emphasizes humankind’s spiritual nature, perhaps to counteract contemporary materialism doctrines.

E. Hymns and Religious Poems

This series is comprised of poems and hymn lyrics Longfellow wrote and those he collected. Notes on the folder inserts indicate authorship when it is known. Because Longfellow freely “rewrote” others’ lyrics and poems to the point where he could not tell the authorship and would publish it as “Anonymous,” the poems and lyrics written in his hand may not be written by him but could be by others or his adaptations. On the lookout for suitable hymns for future publications, he clipped out poems from newspapers and magazines but also copied them out himself.

This sub-series does not contain all of Longfellow’s known hymns or hymnbooks. It seems unlikely that Longfellow himself kept the manuscript or proofs for these books, as Alice Longfellow had to rely on the printed hymnbooks for her 1894 publication for the most part. Several hymnbooks have Longfellow’s annotations giving attributions and indicating corrections.

Series IV. Secular Writings

A. Articles and Lectures

The few non-religious speeches related to his reform activities are in this sub-series.

B. Songs and Poetry

Longfellow also wrote and enjoyed non-religious poetry. The poems and lyrics Longfellow composed and collected are collated here with the author’s name on the folder if known. He and Thomas Wentworth Higginson compiled a selection of poems related to the sea, Thalatta, published in 1853. Materials for a proposed second edition which was never published are included here. Longfellow wrote serious poetry such as “The Golden Sunset” and comical poems like “The Old Porringer” written to celebrate the rediscovery of a Longfellow family heirloom.

Series V. Academic Materials

School assignments from his undergraduate and Harvard Divinity School days comprise most of this series.

22 LONG 23605 and 23606 are the printing plates for AML’s Hymns & Verses.
Series VI. Life of HWL Materials

The galley proofs for the two volumes of The Life of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and the volume of Final Memorials make up the bulk of this series (the three volumes were combined into a new edition of The Life in 1891). The Reverend may have used the several sections of missing pages and paragraphs cut out of individual pages for corrections. Only a few of what must have been his copious biographical notes remain.

Series VII. Personal Materials

Arranged chronologically.

Obituaries, notebooks, scrapbooks, and notes make up this series. The research notes Longfellow made on European reproductive prints and Italian art suggest he was as knowledgeable in these subjects as any of his American contemporaries.

Series VIII. Images

Pencil drawings by Longfellow show his interest and skill in sketching.\(^\text{23}\)

Series IX. Financial Records

The few receipts and bills in this series indicate that the Reverend Samuel did not keep his records for long periods of time.

Series X. Legal Records

The only record is a copyright registration.

Series XI. Estate Records

A small amount remain including a copy of his will. The property records indicate that Longfellow drew a small income from leases on Portland, Maine parcels.

Series XII. Collected Materials

The newspaper clippings, pamphlets, and printed ephemera Longfellow owned are in this series. His clippings and broadsides of religious and secular poems and songs are in those series.

Series XIII. Reference Materials

Articles and a notebook with lecture notes by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana supply biographical information.

Series XIV. Separated Items
Series XV. Oversize Materials
Series XVI. Newsprint Materials
Series XVII. Oversize Newsprint Materials
Series XVIII. Photographic Materials

The above series are composed of materials removed from the collection due to their fragile nature. Separation sheets are inserted in the spot from which an item was removed, and copies of the separation sheets are stored with the removed item in its new location.

Biography

The Educational Years

Samuel Longfellow was born in the Wadsworth-Longfellow House in Portland, Maine on 18 June 1819. The youngest child of the lawyer and Congressman Stephen Longfellow and his wife Zilpah Wadsworth Longfellow, Samuel was educated at the Portland Academy which his elder brothers and sisters attended. He was close to his sister Mary (Greenleaf), the sibling nearest to him in age.

His childhood and preteen letters and journal show a precocious aptitude for literature, art, and foreign languages. He asked a young friend whether he preferred Virgil or Horace and was writing in French and sketching competent drawings of the White Mountains by the age of fourteen. Botany was a favorite subject.

The success of brother Henry as a poet and academic influenced his youngest brother. Instead of attending Bowdoin College as had his older brothers, Samuel went as an undergraduate to Harvard College where Henry was teaching. He took Henry’s German class translating Faust as well as core courses like Rhetoric and Mathematics. His other languages included French and Italian. There seems to have been ample time for other intellectual endeavors such as astronomy with a group of eight friends, including the clergyman and author Edward Everett Hale, called the “Octagon.” He also experimented in the nascent art of photography, recorded here in his diary in a nonchalant fashion:

After this I wandered round a little & went down to Divinity Hall to get Alex Washburn’s “photogenic mixture” or nitrate of silver with which we have been experimenting of late – it being the subject which now appears to occupy the attention of the scientific world – Staid [sic] there some time eating crackers & talking about various matters in the usual desultory way – that is a pleasant room of his, by the by -- & then came home and photogenised, working away in my darkened closet with nitrate & salt & water till dinner & Having dispatched that I tried some of the prepared papers and produced a very good man’s-hand-with-a-bell-in-it upon a choclate (sp.? ) ground, which I pride myself upon as being the first distinct picture we have accomplished.

He concluded his undergraduate career by writing the class poem.

Not unlike other graduates, Samuel had no firm plans upon receiving his bachelor of arts degree.

He rejected an offer of a praetorship at a Portland school, citing a lack of strength needed to discipline that many boys. He accepted a place teaching at a small home school near Elkridge, Maryland where he taught youngsters for over a year.

No extant letters state his reasons for entering the Harvard Divinity School in 1839, but it was an epicenter for the Transcendental movement and thus could attract an intellectually ambitious young man. The year before, Emerson gave his controversial address to the Divinity students, and throughout the 1830s Bostonian Theodore Parker was challenging the miracles of Jesus Christ and the foundations of Christianity. Convers Francis was teaching Divinity students to think anew about Biblical texts in light of the new German biblical criticism. Longfellow and his fellow Harvard Divinity School graduates like Samuel Johnson, David Wasson, Octavius Brooks Frothingham, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and John Weiss would extend the Transcendental reach in their careers as authors, ministers, and public speakers.

Longfellow wished a break in his Divinity studies to recoup his health. He took the opportunity to serve as a tutor to the children of Charles Dabney, the consul, on the island of Fayal in the Azores from 1843 to 1844. The warm climate and picturesque scenery greatly pleased him on his walks and social excursions into the countryside.

Longfellow was so intrigued with Transcendentalism that he considered briefly joining the experimental lifestyle at Brook Farm after his return. He did, however, resume his divinity studies. His life during 1845 to the beginning of 1847 was made pleasant by living with his brother Henry, his wife Fanny, and their growing family at the Craigie House on Brattle Street.

He and his fellow Divinity student Samuel Johnson took upon themselves during their studies the highly ambitious goal of producing a new hymnbook, A Book of Hymns. Each man wrote hymns, and they borrowed lyrics from others. When they were examining other hymnals, he felt “that our book will be the best. If other people will only think so too!”

The Pastorates

His first position as a clergyman was at West Cambridge (now Arlington) for three months. He turned down an offer at Newburyport, Massachusetts and accepted one at the bustling industrial town of Fall River in late 1847. He had been tempted to accept a position at bucolic Brattleboro, Vermont but said that he could do more work in the larger city.

Longfellow did work hard in the Fall River parish. In addition to two Sunday services, he ran a weekly prayer meeting and invited speakers such as Bronson Alcott to speak to his parishioners.

Alcott held weekly “Conversations” which did people “good,” although they were “very fragmentary & unsystematic.” Longfellow also served as chair of the Fall River School Board.

He admitted to friends that his boarding house was dreary and that the Fall River citizens focused on money-making activities instead of their spiritual lives. After telling his sister that he felt he could no longer make a significant impact, he gladly resigned from his position in 1850 to act as a tutor to two young relatives of Fanny during a trip to England and France.

He preached at the Second Unitarian Church in Brooklyn in spring 1853 and was hired on a permanent basis that June. Initially he appreciated the intellectual sympathy of his parishioners who encouraged him in his “free” religious thought which de-emphasized the role of formal religion. Lucretia Mott, the Quaker abolitionist and women’s rights advocate, spoke at his church. The congregation raised funds to build a “pretty little Chapel.” Longfellow had not hidden his abolitionist views from his congregation, but his sermons portraying John Brown as a courageous martyr after the Harper’s Ferry raid drew dissent. He left his position in 1860 to travel to Europe, spending part of the time with Samuel Johnson in Switzerland.

Longfellow spent much of the 1860s and 1870s giving sermons at different New England parishes, “supplying the pulpit” while the regular clergyman was away. He spoke weekly in 1867-1868 at the 28th Street Congregational Society founded by Theodore Parker. His brother Henry’s house served as his home base.

The only time in Longfellow’s life in which he “set up housekeeping” for himself was during his tenure as a minister in Germantown, Pennsylvania. This Quaker-leaning parish, “used to very free preaching,” welcomed him as their pastor in 1878. Longfellow confided to Johnson that he “worked better when in harness.” Several of his sermons were published, and he developed deep friendships with his parishioners. He reluctantly left his duties in 1882 to start the biography of his late brother Henry.

Religious Beliefs

Longfellow, along with a cadre of liberal-thinking clergymen such as Johnson, James Freeman Clark, and John W. Chadwick, developed ways of thinking about a “Free Religion.” Even the Unitarian church, considered one of the more liberal of the Christian sects, was too doctrinal for Longfellow, who explained to his Fall River congregation that he came to them not adhering “to any creed or philosophy already fixed: – but as a free seeker for spiritual truth...” The rituals and intercessors of established religion inhibited the communion between God and the individual, which, to Longfellow, was the essential element in the religious experience.

31 Letter to Frances Elizabeth Appleton Longfellow (hereafter cited as FEAL), 29 June 1849, Box 4, Folder 2.
32 Letter to Samuel Johnson, “day after Thanksgiving,” 1877, Box 6, Folder 1.
33 Letter “To the Unitarian Society in Fall River,” [25 December 1847], Box 3, Folder 6.
His description of God, developed over the years, followed and enhanced the Transcendental view of the Overall Soul. God is not to be imagined as a person but as the Spirit dwelling in Nature and in the individual’s soul. Miracles as related in the Bible did not display God, for “in the soul, in the soul alone, in the human spirit, the conscience, the affections, the will, the ideal imagination – in these lie that primal sense of God which is its own proof … in a Power, a Will, a goodness superior to man, and to nature.” Thus, Longfellow does not envision God in a humanlike form who is the Father of Christ.

Longfellow, a member of the Radical Club but not a signatory member of the Free Religious Association founded in Boston in 1867, sympathized and promoted the Association’s views from the pulpit and through his articles written for the magazine The Radical. In “Some Radical Doctrines,” one “root-idea” is that man has a religious nature: he has “perception of ideas, of universal truths, of the infinite.” He agreed that religion could be valid without believing in Jesus Christ and so was comfortable with Free Religion dropping the “Christian” nomenclature. Instead of any formal religion, he and other “free” religion believers thought that the major monotheistic religions were speaking of the same God. The major religions and Classical philosophies also described what Longfellow, harkening back to the Declaration of Independence, termed “self-evident truths” such as “love thy neighbor as thy self,” truth and honesty.

Some allied with the Free Religion movement were sympathetic to the ideas of British philosopher Herbert Spencer and regarded “natural” laws and phenomena, not immaterial ideas, as the basis of ethics and action. Longfellow, in contrast, further emphasized the spiritual nature of man in his works. He envisioned evolution as a “manifestation of a creative mind,” not an impersonal force. His old friend Samuel Johnson thus described the conflict between materialism and Transcendentalism:

[The] crusade against Transcendentalism & its drop down into Utilitarian Spencerism & the like is, in my judgment, a slide into the gulf... For ideas will rule, not concrete interests, nor the mere phenomenal life of the understanding. And Transcendentalism supplies the one eternal rock of law & progress beneath human feet, now & forever more.³⁶

The Hymns

Longfellow and Samuel Johnson made A Book of Hymns to reflect their liberal religious views. They changed other authors’ hymn lyrics (usually without those authors’ permission) to eliminate references to the Trinity, Christ’s divinity, and the dismal view of Hell in the afterlife. Fellow liberal religious thinkers like Theodore Parker, William H. Furness, and James Freeman Clarke contributed hymns. The book’s audience admittedly, at first, was small – the congregations of their friends and a few sympathizers. It was, however, printed up to 1871. Their second collaboration, Hymns of the Spirit, eliminated references to Jesus and focused upon God and the Spirit. As was typical in hymns of that day, these lyrics were set to existing tunes. In 1860 Longfellow compiled by himself A Book of Hymns and Tunes for the Sunday School, the Congregation, and the Home and dedicated it to the children of his Brooklyn parish.

Longfellow also published Vespers, hymns related to the Sunday evening Vesper services he introduced to his Brooklyn parish. In fact, he may have introduced this English custom to United States churches. In place of a second Sunday sermon, he gave a service of hymns and readings of a reflective nature to prepare for the week ahead. His vesper hymns, “Again As Evening Shadows Fall” and “Now on Land and Sea Descending,” were much admired.

Although Longfellow and Johnson were criticized for their free adaptations of others’ works, they did bring to public notice the now popular hymns of other authors such as Cardinal Newman’s “Lead Kindly Light” and adapted several poems of John Greenleaf Whittier and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow into hymns. Several of Samuel Longfellow’s own hymns are in the current Unitarian hymnbook. His inspirational lyrics like “I Look to Thee in Every Need” held broad appeal in the nineteenth century and became popular in other denominations. Longfellow once said of a popular book by Lydia Maria Child: “Is it not the office of such writers as these to lead down Transcendentalism into the common mind (which cannot take it in its condensed Emersonian form) through the medium of the affections & sympathies & the simpler poetic emotions?” Likewise, Longfellow’s and Johnson’s aim was to spread their Transcendental thought through poetry set to music.

Social Concerns

“The self-evident truths” Longfellow believed belonged to mankind impelled him to political radicalism. Octavius Brooks Frothingham, the author of a treatise on Transcendentalism and a friend of Longfellow, characterized the rationale for championing abolitionism, women’s and native American rights, and temperance:

> The Transcendentalist was satisfied with nothing so long as it did not correspond to the ideal in the enlightened soul; and in the soul recognized the power to make all things new... He prays for the kingdom of Heaven, lives in expectation of it; would not be surprised at its coming any day...In the anti-slavery period the Transcendentalist glorified the negro beyond all warrant of fact, seeing in him an imprisoned soul struggling to be free. The same soul he sees in woman oppressed by limitations; the same in the drunkard, the gambler, the libertine. His eye is ever fixed on the future."

37 Letter to James Richardson, 16 February 1844, Box 2, Folder 10.
He preached against slavery in southern-sympathizing Washington, D.C. in 1847 and spoke out in his New England pulpits. As previously mentioned, he shared the belief of prominent Transcendentalists Emerson and Thoreau that John Brown was a champion of the oppressed who was akin to a saint.

Like fellow abolitionists Elizabeth Cady Stanton and his Harvard Divinity classmate Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Longfellow championed women’s rights, specifically the right to vote and incorporated this theme into his sermons. He was asked to speak at rallies in New York and Philadelphia. The temperance movement, closely allied to the women’s rights and abolitionist movements, also asked him to speak on its behalf.

Longfellow began his career in the late 1840s at the time of the Mexican-American War. In his sermons, he declared his pacifist views bravely for a clergyman starting his career. The Civil War challenged his pacifism because he believed that slavery had to be uprooted. He warned that the “contest [was] not ended but renewed on field of politics…to all to do absolute, complete, & unqualified justice” in regard to black voting rights after the war.

When he lived in Cambridge with his family, he became involved in its causes. He was a founding member and president of the Social Union on Brattle Street and was on the board of the Home for Aged People in Cambridge. In his will, he gave bequests to these organizations and also to the Longfellow Association.

Family Life and Leisure

It was his sense of duty to his family which ended Longfellow’s Germantown pastorate. Longfellow took up the task of writing the memorial biography of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

after the latter’s death in March 1882 because Henry’s close friend, the historian George Washington Greene was not well enough.\textsuperscript{44} Because of the need to study the materials in Cambridge, he left Germantown in June of that year and took up residency in Craigie House “reading, sifting, deciding, rejecting.”\textsuperscript{45} Much of his biography The Life of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow is quoted from the journals and correspondence stored in Henry’s study. Samuel drew together reminiscences and additional excerpts for Final Memorials published in 1887, and both works were arranged to form the three-volume Life.

He had spent many years previously as a resident in Craigie House. He helped with the garden and must have spoken at length about his religious beliefs to his devout sister-in-law Fanny when he lived with her family during his years at the Divinity School. He spent much of the 1860s and 1870s at Craigie House so he was able to relate the family’s activities to their Portland relatives. When Alice and Anne Allegra went abroad to study in 1883–1884, he lived with Mary Longfellow Greenleaf and used Henry’s study in the afternoons. He may have lived with his widowed sister Mary at her comfortable Brattle Street home later when his niece Alice was not at the Craigie. He often spent late summer and part of autumn visiting his Portland relatives.

Years of European travel punctuated his life, beginning with his yearlong stay in the Azores acting as a tutor for the American consul’s family. He eagerly left Fall River to visit England and France as a tutor to two boys in 1851. He did not travel much outside of London and Paris and so felt the time somewhat wasted; however he did observe Louis Napoleon’s coup d’etat in early December. He much more enjoyed his travels walking, climbing mountains, and discussing hymns with his friend Samuel Johnson in 1860 and 1861. He escorted Ernest Longfellow to Paris to study art in 1866 and in 1868 again acted as a guide to his entire family on their Grand Tour of Europe. He and his young friend, the budding journalist Morton Fullerton, visited Europe in 1888, touring England extensively. Longfellow gave himself throughout his life the opportunity to experience the “nameless glow & glory, which you know very well as making the delightful excitement of foreign travel.”\textsuperscript{46}

Legacy

Alice Longfellow devised a memorable seventieth birthday party for her uncle to please the tastes he acquired throughout his life. Craigie House was filled with his beloved flowers, and a trio played compositions by his favorite composer Beethoven. His many friends, attracted by his gentle nature over the years, gave their good wishes.

The cause of his death on 3 October 1892 is unclear. Ever since college, he had been concerned

\textsuperscript{45} “And so, my long work is finished. I can hardly tell how it has lasted so long. But a large part of it makes no appearance in the book – the reading, sifting, deciding, rejecting – yet on the whole I am well satisfied.” Letter to ALP, 17 February 1886, Box 6, Folder 6.

about his stamina and at times suffered from lumbago and respiratory ailments. While on a visit to Portland, he was admitted to the Maine General Hospital and was too ill to return to the Wadsworth-Longfellow House. His old Harvard classmate Edward Everett Hale visited him. When his niece Mary King Longfellow visited him the evening before his death, he spoke these words from John Greenleaf Whittier’s “Hampton Beach”:

\begin{align*}
&\text{So when Time's veil shall fall asunder,} \\
&\text{The soul may know} \\
&\text{No fearful change, nor sudden wonder,} \\ &\text{Nor sink the weight of mystery under,} \\ &\text{But with the upward rise, and with the vastness grow.}
\end{align*}

His contemporaries pointed out that he did not produce scholarly work due to health concerns. Certainly he did not write as copiously as his friends Edward Everett Hale or Thomas Wentworth Higginson. He did, however, develop what Frothingham called a “rich, beautiful, and satisfying intellectual world [which he] ably defended in his \textit{Radical essays}.”\textsuperscript{47} His hymns, in the words of another admirer John W. Chadwick, were “songs of hope and cheer” to many.\textsuperscript{48}
