ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Northeast Museum Services Center staff would like to express their gratitude towards the staff at Lowell National Historical Park for their assistance in carrying out this work. In particular, thanks must go to Museum Specialist Jack Herlihy and Chief of Cultural Resources and Programming David Blackburn for all their help. The Park generously provided a processing area, and Administrative Officer Diana Shiba aided greatly in managing the project funding. The assistance of the Park's Museum Aide Ami Krawczyk in cataloging the records has been invaluable; special thanks goes to her.

HISTORY

Establishment and Objectives

The Lowell Historic Preservation Commission was established in the 1978 legislation creating the Lowell National Historical Park. The Commission was to create a Preservation Plan and to set standards for the historic preservation efforts in the Park zone (part of the downtown, the Wannalancit Textile Company area, and the canal system) and the Preservation District around the Park of over 800 properties. The Commission was to focus rehabilitation efforts on ten historically important buildings mentioned in the Legislation. Another important goal was to aid the Park in telling the human history of Lowell's industrial past.

The national park concept had been growing since 1968 when Lowell educator J. Patrick Mogan of the Human Services Corporation, a City of Lowell educator, conceptualized an "urban park" in which Lowell's citizens celebrated their immigrant pasts and industrial city. Other civic leaders were intrigued with a park's promise of tourism and development. The State of Massachusetts developed the Lowell Heritage State Park to promote the canal system's recreational and historical potential. In a similar effort, the City of Lowell created a Historic Canal District. The federal Lowell Historical Canal District issued detailed recommendations for a national park; these recommendations were recognized in the Park's enabling legislation and became the focus for the Commission's activities.

Development Projects

The Commission was unlike other park partners in that it received yearly appropriations to develop major projects. It had been given the power to lease and acquire properties; in contrast, the Park could only acquire property by gift. The Commission, therefore, acted on behalf of the Park to rehabilitate properties for the Park's use, to create a trolley transportation system, and to develop pathways along the canals.

The first major project completed was Market Mills, the rehabilitation of two mill buildings abandoned by the owners, for affordable housing and the Park visitor center. The Commission worked with the private developer, Market Mills Associates, to create public green space and a courtyard. The Commission also fitted up the remaining ground level spaces for tenants A Brush with History art gallery and studios, the Lowell Telecommunications Corporation, and a food court.

The Commission funded and oversaw the exterior and interior renovations of the Boott Mills Boarding House which became the Mogan Cultural Center, a major Park exhibit space also housing the University of Massachusetts at Lowell Special Collections. The Commission created the Boarding House Park area in front of the Cultural Center. Boott Mills No. 6, now the center for the Park's museum operations, originally had been restored for another owner, the Wang Laboratories, with funding from the Commission (the Wang eventually sold the building to the Commission which donated it to the Park). The Commission also funded the stair tower renovations for the Boott Mills buildings.

The Lowell Historical Canal District Report and the enabling legislation mandated a trolley system to run between the Park's venues. The Commission developed the electrified trolley system consisting of Boston and Maine Railroad rehabilitated tracks and new trolley cars. The first two cars were open-sided and built upon undercarriages from Australia. The electrified system began in 1984 with the Park maintaining and operating the cars. One enclosed closed car for yearlong use was built by 1987. The tracks were extended in two major projects with one extension from French Street to the Wannalancit area and the other extension to Eastern Canal Park and the Jack Kerouac Commemorative.

The Commission, along with the Park and state and city entities, participated in what would become known as the Canalway project, the building of walkways and the general enhancement of the canal system. In projects for the revitalization of the Central Street/Pawtucket Canal area, the Boott Mills area, and the Boott Mills Canalway, the Commission developed the types of signage, fencing, and railing typical of the Canalway projects. The Lucy Larcom Park and Prescott Park lining the canals were also rehabilitated.

The Commission noted in its literature that major projects were developed with a cultural component. The Commission oversaw a Mills Girls, an Immigrant, and a labor history exhibit for the Mogan Cultural Center. It was a major sponsor of Lowell's public sculpture program developed in the 1980s. One of the first examples of public art was installed in the Market Mills park area, and others were located to complement the canalways. The purpose of Boarding House Park was to serve as a stage for plays and concerts.

Grants and Loans

The Cultural Programs staff of the Commission supervised the granting of awards in two annual cycles until around 1986 when one round of grants was given yearly. The grants were to relate to the Park's themes or to historical themes of Lowell. Popular topics were immigrants and immigration, the fine and decorative arts and architecture in Lowell, ethnic festivals, and archaeology of local sites. The Cultural Programs staff was also responsible for major funding and general support to public sculpture, to the Folklife Program research project with the Library of Congress, to the New England Folklife Center housed in the Mogan Cultural Center, and to the Center's exhibits.

The Preservation Plan team described in the Plan and Details of the Plan the Commission's building grants and loans programs and created an Index of Properties ranking the buildings' historical significance. The Architectural and Planning staffs developed the standards for design review for the historic rehabilitation with the City of Lowell to guide renovations in the Park and Preservation District. Grants and loans following these standards for buildings listed as nationally important in the Index were given in amounts ranging from the thousands to hundreds of thousands. Commission literature cites the high ratio of private investment as compared to the LHPC public investment in these historic rehab projects.

Aftermath

The Commission successfully lobbied for and obtained an extension of its tenure in the mid-1980s. However, the second effort to extend its services was not acted upon and so the Commission disbanded in mid-1995. The Park continued the Canalway efforts and participated in design review for the Preservation District. The Park, the Lowell Office of Cultural Affairs, and educational institutions fostered Lowell's cultural and arts promotion.

The Commission's staff, led by its Executive Directors Fred Faust, Armand Mercier, and Peter Aucella at various times, had been put together specifically to run development projects and administer grants. The Commission received national awards for the trolley system and waterfront development. It hosted visitors from the United States and the United Kingdom who wanted to learn about its role in Lowell's preservation and rebuilding.

The legacy of the Commission is perhaps most evident in the major development projects for the Park such as the trolley system, the Park's Boott Mills Museum and Mogan Center, and segments of the Canalway. However, the cultural grants program fostered artwork and publications and reinforced the Park's programming in folklife and Lowell history. Much of what is now appreciated as historic downtown Lowell resulted from the Commission's grants and loans enabling its rehabilitation and revitalization.

SERIES DESCRIPTIONS

I. Pre-Commission Records, 1976-1978

The legislative history and the report of the Lowell Team outlining preferences for the proposed park are located in this series.

Another source of ideas regarding an urban park in Lowell was the Human Services Corporation. Its records are available at Special Collections, Univ. of Mass. Lowell.

II. Central Files, 1987-1995

The Commission adopted the central filing system of the National Park Service so the Commission's official records are marked and filed according to the NPS records schedule.

The minutes of the Commission, the first portion of the Central Files, give the summary of the monthly meetings. In these meetings, the LHPC staff briefed the commissioners drawn from federal, state, and local governments and the community at large about the Commission's development projects and cultural affairs programming. The minutes beginning in 1985 contain the briefing papers from the staff which give extensive information about status of the Commission's many projects and are extremely helpful in determining the chronology of various events. The briefing papers also include photocopies of news articles mentioning the Commission, thus indicating the Commission's relationship to the public.

Another major segment relates to memorandums of agreement, in particular to the Lowell Development and Financial Corporation, a consortium of local banks that administered the preservation loans for the Commission.

Only a small portion of "top-level" records related to planning (D), interpretation (K), and history (H) are located in the Central Files. The research will find those materials in the Planning and Architectural series.

Only a small portion of records related to planning (D), interpretation (K), and history (H) are located here.

III. Administrative Files, 1980-1995

In addition to its Central Files, the Commission's administration including its executive director filed documents into folders labeled only with subject headings. A major topic is the ongoing battle to regulate commercial billboards in the Park and Preservation District. The Standard Operating Procedures (SOP) for preservation and cultural program grants and the planning process are also present.

IV. Cultural Programs, 1980-1995

Apart from its regular cyclical grants program, the Commission provided major funding for projects related to the themes of the city's immigrant history and the arts. While the Park was to administer the exhibit space in the newly rehabilitated Mogan Cultural Center; the Commission helped to fund and oversee the exhibits featuring immigrant and labor history. Boarding House Park was conceived as a space to display the performing arts. The Commission sponsored several major public sculptures placed at highly visible places at Market Mills and the canalways.

A. Special Projects, 1985-1995

Materials re: public art projects' genesis and funding are located here; documentation on the physical locations is also in the Development Projects series.

B. Grant Administration, 1981-1993

This sub-series holds the documentation about the formulation of grant criteria as well as the lists of funded projects.

C. Grant Project Files, 1981-1993

These files demonstrate the range and variety of the funded grants. They are arranged by grant account numbers.

D. Subject Files, 1977-1994

The minutes of the cultural staff are included. A major topic is the lengthy development of a video related to the labor movement for the Mogan Cultural Center.

E. Photographic Materials, 1984

V. Planning, 1979-1995

The planning staff, including its two Planning Directors, Sarah Peskin, and Christine (Goetting) Briggs, maintained the documentation regarding the Commission's major projects arranged in subject files. These files contain a wealth of background information about the Preservation Plan, the Canalway, transportation in Lowell including the trolley system, and the relationship between historic preservation and economic development. The Development Projects series (see below) documents the projects in the subsequent phases.

The Preservation Plan (see copy in the Publication Series) noted the requirement for an Index of Properties to rate the structures in the Preservation District. The team who prepared the Preservation Plan determined the historic significance of properties within the National Park and Preservation District and created a ranking system indicating those of major national significance, local significance, and little significance. Those of national significance were eligible for Commission assistance.

The Index's ratings were based on the information collected for the Cultural Resources Inventory. The architectural firm of Shepley, Bulfinch, Richardson and Abbott conducted for the NPS this survey of the individual properties in the Preservation District which was completed by January 1980. The published report and the original surveys with attached photographs are included in this sub-group. (An electronic copy courtesy of LOWE and Special Collections, Univ. of Mass. Lowell is available at <http://uml.edu/cri>.)

1. Index, 1979-1995

2. Cultural Resources Inventory, 1979-1995

VI. Architectural, 1979-1995

The highly interrelated subgroups in this subseries document the activity of Chief Historical Architect Charles Parrott who served throughout the tenure of the Commission. Historical Architects David Bitterman and Lance Kasperian also served on the staff. The staff often provided the preliminary designs and always participated fully in the major development projects, hence the extensive information concerning canals and canalways including field notes and measurements, photoprints, and slides. (The Development Projects series also contains the architects' files, see below).

The staff also administered the historic preservation grants (sometimes called the physical grants as opposed to the cultural grants) and loans program. To obtain the grants or larger loans (run through the LDFC), the projects needed to adhere to the Standards guiding the Preservation District. In addition, buildings applying for certain exterior modifications needed to follow the Standards. Thus, the Commission's architect participated in the design review process for many buildings in historic downtown Lowell and developed the Preservation Grants/Loans, Design Review, and Indexed Buildings files with rehabilitation project documents including drawings. Major buildings such the Bon Marche Building, Early Residence, St. Anne's Church, and Old City Hall are represented.

VII. Development Projects, 1979-1995

The major construction and rehabilitation projects generated considerable documentation including contracts and modifications, correspondence between contractor and the Commission's project supervisors and between Commission administrative, architectural, and planning staffers, copies of land deeds and easements, and design and construction drawings. The projects developed for the Park including the trolley and the canals are in this series (the Planning Files – see above – document the projects' inception). The documentation re: the Gas Light Building, once the offices of the Commission, is included because it is one of the ten buildings singled out for special consideration in the enabling legislation. The files on St. Peter's Church are extensive and demonstrate the considerable involvement of the Commission staff and resources attempting to rehabilitate a historic structure and halt demolition.

A. Specifications

Specifications, often packaged as project manuals, give the special instructions set out to potential bidders in the contract package and thus serve as one of the starting points for approaching the projects. The Commission's architectural staff gathered specifications including those the Commission developed for private properties.

B. Contracts

The Commission had its own contracting officer who followed NPS procedures. These copies were housed separately from other Commission files and thus may be extra Contracting Officer copies. (In addition, copies of the contracts and their modifications were kept in the Design and Construction files by project managers and other Commission staff.)

C. Design and Construction

This sub-series consists of the documents for the projects' actual design and construction. The Commission fostered communication between staff and contractors by placing their files in an area marked for that project during and after the project. Administrative, architectural, and planning files, therefore, are added to the Contracting Officer Representative's documentation, making for extremely detailed histories. Correspondence, contracts and modifications, drawings, project notebooks, manuals, and photodocumentation comprise these files.
