NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

The Wilkeson Community House is situated on .86 acre parcel in the heart of the small business district of Wilkeson, Washington. The building rests on west side of Church Street/SR 165 and faces east, set back from the road by an expansive lawn. The lawn is enclosed by a unique saw blade fence (contributing) on the east and south property lines. Here wood posts separate five horizontal rows of used stone cutting blades. The front lawn is flat, raised to accommodate direct access to the main entry, and tappers off quickly to the rear and north sides of the building, allowing for a daylight basement. Landscaping is limited to minimal foundation plantings and manicured lawn. A stone pathway leads from the entry to Church Street and a side parking lot. Also located within the front lawn area is a reproduction street clock (non-contributing), and flagpole.

The Community House is a rectangular building comprising of an L-shaped stone footprint and stick-built infill on the SW corner. The Craftsman style building was constructed of locally quarried sandstone laid in a random coursed ashlar pattern. A stone water table defines the first floor from the basement level. On the main façade the gable roof is covered with metal shingles, while the rest is clad in three-tab asphalt. Little to no overhang on the eaves and verge boards leave a clean, non-Craftsman style look to the building. Two gable dormers, with attic vents and coursed cedar shingles, highlight an offset entry shed-roof veranda which is supported by three square columns resting on stone bases. Originally the entry was accessed via a short flight of wooden steps, but the grade has been raised to allow for ADA access. The side gable roof is anchored by exterior end chimneys on the north and south facades. Windows are generally casement style grouped in pairs of two or three, although single units are found on either side of the fireplaces and adjacent to the main entry door. Each window boasts a large bottom pane highlighted by a pair a smaller upper window panes.

At the northwest corner is the gymnasium wing, constructed of balloon framing and clad with 4" exposure weatherboard wood siding. The shallow gable roof has no overhang and is cover with asphalt shingles. Large one-over-one wood windows are evenly spaced on the north façade allowing light to penetrate the gym and a single pedestrian entry door is located near the north end. The gymnasium bay extends approximately 15' from the brick portion of the building. The south face accommodates a wooden garage door.

Inside the main entry has a large foyer highlighted by painted wood wainscoting and carpeted floors. A single stall bathroom is tucked into the northwest corner. To the south was the library space; boasting original fir floors, original plywood paneled walls reaching to the height of the top of the windows and a simple fireplace faced with smooth sandstone and a wooden mantel. To the north is the social hall. Slightly altered, this space now housing offices, has carpeted and asphalt tile floor, and original plywood and baton wainscoting reaching the height of the tops of the windows, although this has been painted. On the south wall is coursed stone fireplace with stone mantel. The north wall featured two large openings of wood panels which slide into the ceiling allowing viewing access to the basement gymnasium space. To the rear of the first floor is the large open chapel area now housing the city council chambers. This room has an open cathedral type of ceiling with exposed roof rafters. Painted all white, this space also has plywood and baton wainscoting reaching to the height of the top of the windows. A large pass through window wall at the rear allowed overflow of parishioners in into the library area if needed. On the north wall sets of interior windows (matching those on the outside wall) allow light to penetrate the gymnasium space. The floors are covered with carpet and modern neon – tube lights hang from the ceiling.

Access to the basement level is via a simple staircase in the entry foyer. The main space in the basement is the large gymnasium area, clad on the inside walls and ceiling with tongue & grove boards. The wood floor has been removed and now has exposed concrete. Temporary wood poles run down the center of the ridge line to support the roof. Remnants of a stage can be found on the west end of the space. Also in the basement are a series of meeting and social rooms, as well as a small kitchen and the remains of a shower area/ locker room. Today the basement area serves as storage for city equipment and excess office furniture.

NARRATIVE STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The Wilkeson Community House in Wilkeson, Washington is historically significant at the local level under criterion A for its direct link to the religious, social and recreational growth of a small mining town in western Washington. Completed in 1923, the Community House was envisioned, designed, and built to provide for the spiritual, moral and health/wellness needs of a community comprised of recent European immigrants who struggled to make a living in the mines, quarries and forest in the early 20th century.

The Community House is also significant under criteria C as a resource that embodies the distinctive characteristics of its type and period of construction. The period of significance begins in 1923, the date the building opened, and ends in 1947, the year the property was transferred to the Town of Wilkeson to serve a new use.

The community of Wilkeson was formed as a result of the discovery coal in the early 1860s. Officially coal was first discovered in the area in 1862, but it wasn't until after Samuel Wilkeson's survey for the Northern Pacific Railroad in 1869 that the potential deposits of coal and sandstone were realized. Coal mining in the area began in 1873 and in 1877 the Northern Pacific Railroad built a branch line to the area from Tacoma.

Practically overnight, east Pierce County's Carbon River coal district was dotted with a dozen small mining communities. They included Pittsburg, Carbonado, South Prairie, Fairfax, Manley-Moore, Melmont, Montezuma, Morristown, Wingate, Burnett and Wilkeson.

The community of Wilkeson, platted in 1889 by Joseph and Lydia Johns and named after Samuel Wilkeson, grew around the train station, post office and a school. The town officially incorporated in 1909 with 899 people on the census roles. Coal from Wilkeson and the surrounding communities quickly became a major factor in the development of the Pacific Coast. In Wilkeson, two major companies operated; The Commonwealth Coal Co. and the Wilkeson Coal & Coke Co.

Commonwealth produced 31,000 tons of coal utilizing 48 inside miners and 23 outside employees in 242 days of operation. The Wilkeson Coal & Coke Co. produced 119,000 tons of coal, of which 64,000 was charged through coke ovens to produce 39,000 tons of coke. Their mine operated 276 days, with 145 inside miners, 112 outside employees. By 1910 the Wilkeson Coal & Coke Co. was the largest producer of coke in the State with over 100 ovens in operation.

In 1909 the typical miner earned $3.80 per day with inside-the-mine wages ranging from $1.60 for a trapper boy to $3.95 for a shot (i.e. dynamite) lighter. Outside employees earned from $1.45 per day for greasers to $3.70 per day for a first class carpenter. Stableman earned $85 per month.

Also fueling the growth of the city was an active sandstone quarry (opened in 1886) which supplied building stone for a variety of structures across the state including the nominated building. With the importance of the coal and sandstone, Immigrants by the hundreds started arriving after being offered jobs and decent housing for their families. By the 1900 Wilkeson had a population of 1,000 and reportedly reached a high of 5,250 by 1918. Census records show a diverse population of European immigrants; some 82% by 1920. The ethnic groups consisted of Welsh, English, Scots, Germans, Austrians, Swiss, Swedes, Norwegians, French, Belgians, Slovaks, Italians, Poles, Croats, Finns and Russians.

However by 1919 the area was struggling due to failing markets and a nationwide strike of the coal miners' union, the United Mine Workers of America. The bitter coal industry strikes lasted for two and a half years. Tensions rose in Wilkeson as non-union workers were brought in to fill 400 union jobs. The Wilkeson Coal & Coke Co. was the only mine in the state which tried to continue operations with non-union employees. At one point, John J. Hewitt, treasurer of the Company asked the Governor to send troops to Wilkeson due to fighting between union and non-union members, many of whom were WWI veterans.

It was during this time that the Reverend Thomas J. Gambell and his wife arrived in Wilkeson. Sent by the Methodist Episcopal Women's Home Missionary Society of the Puget Sound Conference and the Board of Home Missions, at the time community had between twelve and fifteen hundred people. There were two Catholic churches, a Greek and Roman, in town but neither had held services for the past two years. Reportedly there had never been a Protestant church with a resident pastor in the forty-two year history of the community. Some believed that the absence of the church was attested by the presence of nine pool halls and one house of ill repute.

Due to the strike, poverty was abound and children particularly suffered. The Gambell's initially focused their ministry on first aid and clothing. More than 3,000 garments handed out in the first two years the Gambell's arrived and an unusually large number of children had adenoids and enlarged tonsils, and poor dental hygiene. The Gambell's arranged for twenty-four children to be taken to the county hospital for tonsil operations. They had to serve thirty nationalities and struggled over the lack of equipment. Sunday school was held in an old schoolhouse and church services were conducted at the Finn Hall. The absence of adults to teach Sunday School classes made necessary the training of boys and girls. Reportedly Mrs. Gambell had also trained a group of girls to sing whenever needed, either on special occasions or at regular services.

It was under these difficult circumstances the Gambell's worked to create a community house and gain the confidence of the community. Their average Sunday School attendance rose to 87 students (in a community 95% Catholic) in nine classes; they held first aid classes and social programs, and organized entertainment activities. With support, they began by garnering land donated from the Northern Pacific Railroad and the Wilkeson Coal & Coke Company, and then secured the commitment and financial backing of the church's Board of Home Missions to create a building to directly support the spiritual, social and health needs of the residents. The goal was to specifically have a facility in which to hold church services, Sunday school and to conduct their "Americanization work".

Wanting the building to be a lasting testament to their mission, the Gambell's and the Women's Home Missionary Society most likely retained an architect, but any such attribution is unverified at this time. Some documents note that G.A. Swanson from Tacoma was the architect. However, documents note that Swanson was a building contractor and his known projects are limited to modest Craftsman Bungalows.

The 60' x 90' building was constructed from sandstone from the local quarry and was built on $\frac{3}{4}$ acre of land. Inside the building housed a social hall, chapel, kitchen, reading room with expansive fireplace, gymnasium, boys and girls rooms, and a Sunday School room. The building was located in the central business district and main hub of Wilkeson, the building sat in close proximity to hotels, shops, restaurants, taverns and pool halls.

Formal dedication ceremonies took place on November 11, 1923. Dedication ceremonies included a variety of speakers organized by Rev. D. Roland Martin, Director of the Methodist Home Mission Society - Tacoma Office who dedicated the building to worship and Dr. J.E. Crowther of Seattle who was the principle speaker. Music was furnished by the Wilkeson Orchestra.

In his annual report to the Mission Society, Rev. Martin reported in 1924 that the Community House in Wilkeson was "one of the most complete and up-to-date plants to be found in any town of like size in the State." The cost for the building and equipment was $15,000, with a debt of just $5,000. Martin also noted that the missionary work in the community would remain for years and that "reports from young people from foreign speaking groups have been exceedingly gratifying".

The Wilkeson Community House quickly became an important gathering place for the diverse and oftentimes impoverished families continuing to community harmony, order, and a sense of shared history. It played host to a variety of activities including hosting club meetings for various organizations such as 4-H and Scouts, athletic contests, church on Sundays, mid-week prayer meetings, Sunday school, socials, and educational gatherings. The building also housed a library throughout the 1930s providing needed social and service opportunities for community members.

After the coal strike, mining continued on a slow decline with the last mining company seizing operation in 1938. Wilkeson's population dropped to 369 people by 1940. By 1946, the Community House had been abandoned, perhaps due to WWII and the demands related to it. As a result, a decision was made to sell the building.

The Town of Wilkeson saw the value of the building and pursued a purchase price from the Board of Home Missions of $1,500 for the building and contents. Formal transfer occurred in a quick claim deed on September 26, 1947 from the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Town of Wilkeson. The town council then converted the building for use as a town hall. A branch of the newly formed Pierce County Library System was added shortly after which remained in active use until budget woes of the library system forced it closure in 2003.

Today the building still serves as the town hall, and remains the centerpiece of the Town of Wilkeson. The main floor houses city offices in the former reading room, library and social hall spaces; while the council chamber is located in the former chapel area. The basement area, containing the gymnasium is unused.

Wilkeson Community House Dedication – 1923

MINING TOWN HAS NEW SOCIAL HALL

Wilkeson Dedicates Community House Sunday With Formal Ceremonies

Tacoma Daily Ledger
11/12/23

Wilkeson's new Community House, designed to fill the need of the coal mining town as a community meeting place, social and religious center, was dedicated to its important mission in fitting services Sunday. The formal dedication took place at 3 p. m. but the house was open to the community all day and its wide fireplace crackled with a cheerful greeting to all visitors.

Dedication of the building to the worship which will be part of its activities was made by Dr. D. Roland Martin of Tacoma. Dr. J. E. Crowther of Seattle was the principal speaker. Rev. Thomas J. Gambill, to whom is given the main credit for the successful completion of the ambitious community house project, presided. Music was furnished by the Wilkeson orchestra.

The new house, an artistic structure built of Wilkeson sandstone and attractively set off by broad lawns, will ring with many activities this winter, including club meetings for both men and women, social affairs for boys and girls, athletic contests, church services on Sunday and midweek prayer meetings.

There are big fireplaces at each end of the building and a spacious veranda. There are included a social hall, reading room, kitchen, gymnasium, boys' and girls' rooms and a Sunday school room.

WILKESON HAS NEW COMMUNITY HOUSE

Informal Dedication Program Held Today

Where Miners and Families Will Meet.

First Impetus to Completed Plans Came Two Years Ago, Residents Say, With Arrival of the Rev. Thomas J. Gambill and Wife With Announcement That They Intended to Stay.

WILKESON'S Community House will be dedicated today. The ceremony will be an auspicious event in the snug little coal region in the foothills of Pierce County, for the miners and their families and other residents have taken much interest in the building of their "new house." It is constructed of Wilkeson sandstone, has massive chimneys and columns, a big veranda, social hall, chapel, kitchen, reading room with an expansive fireplace, gymnasium, boys' and girls' rooms and a Sunday School room. It is the first real Community House Wilkeson ever has had.

The program of dedication, on the whole, will be rather informal. There will be two or three talks and music by the Wilkeson orchestra, but for the most part the Wilkeson citizens will merely walk about their new possession, enjoy the warmth of its fireplace, inspect the various rooms, and allow their eyes to gaze over the expansive lawn which surrounds the house.

The first impetus given the thought to build a Community House in Wilkeson came, the residents say, with the arrival two years ago of the Rev. Thomas J. Gambill and his wife. The pastor announced that he intended to stay in Wilkeson and make it his home. Little attention, however, was paid to his declaration, for pastors came and went with frequent regularity in the little mining town. But the Rev. Mr. Gambill and his wife did remain, and faith in them grew so great that when they urged the people to cooperate for a stone Community House, the job was all but done.

A wide program of activities has been planned for the Community House this winter. There will be club meetings for men and women and the boys and girls as well, athletic contests, church on Sunday, midweek prayer meetings, Sunday School, socials and educational gatherings.

The formal part of the dedication ceremony will be held at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Dr. J. E. Crowther of Seattle will deliver the principal address and Dr. D. Roland Martin of Tacoma will dedicate the building to worship.
