Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

The Old Ocean Springs Historic District Boundary Increase covers 255 acres in Ocean Springs, Jackson County, Mississippi. The territory in the boundary increase is located to the north, west and east of the existing Old Ocean Springs Historic District, listed on the National Register in 1987. The resources in the boundary increase are primarily residences but include commercial, institutional, and religious buildings. The boundary increase includes the historic downtown of the City of Ocean Springs found along Washington Street and Government Street, south of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad tracks. The street grid is orthogonal in most of the district. The lots vary in size, with smaller lots found in the commercial core and larger lots throughout the residential areas. The location of the buildings on the lots follows a similar pattern with most commercial buildings abutting public sidewalks and most residential structures set back on the lot providing front lawns.

Narrative Description

Administrative Matters

The Old Ocean Springs Historic District in Ocean Springs was listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1987 as part of the Ocean Springs Multiple Resource Area. This nomination proposes a boundary increase, an expansion in the period of significance, and additional areas of significance based on new documentation compiled by FEMA in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. The original historic district nomination included a total of 105 resources, 65 of which were contributing and 40 of which were noncontributing. The original period of significance was c.1850-c.1935, and the district was significant under Criterion C in the area of Architecture. The boundary of the original district was decreased in 2014 due to loss of integrity to a portion of the district from damage caused by Hurricane Katrina.

The proposed boundary increase includes a total of 444 resources, 337 of which are contributing, and 97 of which are noncontributing. Ten resources were previously listed individually on the National Register. This nomination proposes to expand the period of significance to c.1850-1964 to include buildings that have achieved significance since the historic district was listed in the National Register in 1987. The amended historic district is significant under Criterion A for Commerce, Community Planning and Development, Entertainment/Recreation; and under Criterion C for Architecture.

Description

The proposed boundary increase encompasses in an area roughly bounded by the Louisville & Nashville (L & N) Railroad tracks on the north, First Avenue on the west, Calhoun Street and Ocean Avenue on the south, and Magnolia Avenue and Ward Avenue on the east. The district includes Ocean Springs' historic downtown commercial area, located principally on Washington Avenue -the main north-south street- and Government Street, the main east-west street. Porter Avenue, two blocks south of and parallel to Government Street, is another important east-west thoroughfare. The majority of the buildings in the district are detached single-family houses, which are located along the side streets of the downtown area, as well as in the area surrounding downtown to the south, east and west. Churches, schools, and parks are distributed throughout the district.

Ocean Springs is located on a headland with water on three sides. The downtown area is generally flat. Beyond downtown the topography slopes gradually downward toward Biloxi Bay to the west and south. The district is distinctive for its mature trees, particularly the many live oak trees, such as those that canopy Washington Avenue and other streets, and grace the lawns of many of the homes.

During the late 19th and early 20th centuries, commercial properties such as boarding houses, small hotels, and neighborhood stores were scattered throughout the residential areas. Few of these survive, and the once mixed-use neighborhoods are now predominantly single-family residential.

Similarly, residences were once common in the downtown. Over time, most of these houses have been removed or adapted for use as offices, stores, or restaurants. For the most part, residential conversions have been sympathetic, and the original character maintained, as is the case with the Kiernan House at 622 Washington Avenue (1914), now a clothing store (Inventory No. 410).

The district's development was closely tied to the railroad, which roughly bounds the district on the north. Ocean Springs was popular as a resort community beginning in the 1850s. Most early buildings were located in the vicinity of the steamboat wharf at the south end of Jackson Avenue on Biloxi Bay, or near Old Fort Bayou. The town's center moved to the railroad after the line was extended in 1870, connecting Ocean Springs with New Orleans and Mobile, and with the Midwest. Five structures were identified in the district that pre-date the railroad era, all located south of Porter Avenue.

Seventy buildings in the district as amended date from the years between 1880 and 1910, when the dominant house styles were Queen Anne, with 12 examples; Colonial Revival, with 17 examples, and Folk Victorian, with 22 examples. Generally, during this time period, development took place around the area of the central business district.¹

The period extending from 1910 to 1950 saw the proliferation of the Craftsman style. There are 135 houses in the district that exhibit the influence of this popular American style, including Craftsman, Craftsman Vernacular, and Bungalow houses. In the 1930s, the Minimal Traditional and Ranch styles were introduced. These styles, with 25 and 72 examples respectively, were also popular locally as throughout the nation.

The buildings of the Old Ocean Springs Historic District, express a variety of architectural styles and types, and are generally compatible in scale, materials, and character. The district retains a sufficient degree of integrity to convey its historic character. Of the 97 noncontributing resources, most are classified as such because they fall outside the period of significance. An example of a resource that does not meet the 50-year requirement is the First Baptist Church at 602 Washington Avenue (1969, Inventory No. 406), the successor to the Tidewater Baptist Church, the oldest known congregation in the Ocean Springs area.² The building at 1010 Government Street, built between 2006 and 2009 (Inventory No. 145) is another building in the downtown area that falls outside the period of significance. Although it was built in the last 10 years, this building is distinctive for its compatibility with the surrounding commercial area. Examples of more intrusive buildings include the commercial building at 1001 Bowen Avenue (Inventory No. 11) and residences constructed since Hurricane Katrina in 2005, including the house at 608 Azalea Lane in 2009 (Inventory No. 3).

Most of the noncontributing buildings are houses. These range from the Neo-Eclectic house at 1301 Calhoun Avenue, built to resemble a Victorian era home (2005, Inventory No. 58), to a simple Ranch style house built in 1976 that is in keeping with the scale of the neighborhood (606 Kotzum Avenue, Inventory No. 214). Examples of houses that are old enough to be contributing but are extensively altered are the house at 607 Catchot Place (1950/c.2006, Inventory No. 70), and the house at 310 Dewey Avenue (c.1915-1925, Inventory No. 103).

Several properties within the historic district boundaries are individually listed in the National Register. These are:

- Bertuccini House and Barbershop, 619 Washington Avenue, Ocean Springs Multiple Resource Area (MRA), 87000598 (Inventory No. 408)
- Carter-Callaway House, 916 State Street, Ocean Springs MRA, 87000596 (Inventory No. 351)

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Old Ocean Springs Historic District Boundary Increase is significant under Criterion A for Commerce, Community Planning and Development, Entertainment/Recreation; and under Criterion C for Architecture. The district represents several important events and eras in the town's history, including the resort industry, railroad service, development of the downtown commercial area, population expansion during World War II, and post-World War II suburbanization. The historic district is also significant for its architecture, which is characteristic of architectural styles and types along the Mississippi Gulf Coast.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Statement of Significance

The significance of the boundary increase area supplements and more clearly illustrates the significance of the original district. Therefore, in some areas, the context is best understood with some references to the structures of the existing district.

Background History

The settlement that came to be known as Ocean Springs was founded in 1699 as an outpost of the French government and is one of the oldest settlements in Mississippi. It was originally called Biloxi, but renamed East Biloxi after a new settlement was established on the west side of the bay and given the name New Biloxi. East Biloxi was abandoned by the French in 1722. The region in which it was located came under control of England in 1763, then Spain in 1779, and finally the United States in 1812.³

East Biloxi remained little more than a small fishing village well into the 19th century. By this time, New Orleans had emerged as the principal port of the South. Mobile was another important port. The two cities bordered the Mississippi Gulf Coast, the location of several small settlements. Initially, there were few roads and water transportation was slow, creating isolation and limiting economic opportunity for these Mississippi villages. Prior to becoming a resort, however, East Biloxi was sparsely settled.

The few families who came in the 18th century supported themselves through small scale farming, hunting and fishing. The population grew in the early years of the 19th century after the area became part of the United States in 1812, and Mississippi became a state in 1817. Before the steamboat era, a schooner trade had been established in charcoal and lumber. After steamboats came into use, a wharf was built at the foot of Jackson Avenue, and East Biloxi became a regular refueling station on the New Orleans to Mobile steamship run. Commercial development started to take place in the vicinity of the wharf.⁴ In the early 19th century, summer resorts were established and patronized by wealthy New Orleans and Mobile families who sought relief from the cities during the hot and humid summer months. Around mid-century, the area that would later be known as Ocean Springs became one of these popular vacation spots.⁵

It was not until mineral springs were discovered in 1852 by Reverend P.P. Bowen that there would be significant interest in the area as a resort. Bowen discovered the springs in the area east of his sawmill, on the south side of Fort Bayou. Recognizing the stream's medicinal benefits, Bowen erected marble baths at the location of the springs, one each for men and women, and piped in spring water. The springs attracted visitors to the town, which quickly gained importance as a resort.⁶ The springs were located in the area of Ocean Springs that is listed on the National Register in 1987 as the Marble Springs Historic District.⁷

The Ocean Springs Hotel was the first hostelry. It was located on the west side of Jackson Avenue south of Cleveland Avenue, and operated from 1853 to 1905. Carriages transported people from the hotel to the springs. The town had been named Lynchburg Springs when the post office was established in 1853, but was soon renamed Ocean Springs, after the hotel.⁸ The town's popularity increased after the discovery of the mineral springs as visitors became convinced of its healing properties. New Orleanians had experienced a yellow fever epidemic in 1853, and viewed Ocean Springs as a healthful vacation spot.⁹ Visitors during this period not only bathed in the mineral springs, but also fished, gathered oysters, swam in the Mississippi Sound, and enjoyed yachting.¹⁰

There were several hotels and other types of accommodations related to the early resort industry, but few survive. In addition to the Ocean Springs Hotel, tourists enjoyed the Morris House, a boarding house on the northeast corner of Jackson and Ocean avenues (1854-1900); the Seashore

House, a hotel on the east side of Jackson Avenue north of Front Beach (c.1855-1885); the Egan House, on the east side of Jackson between Ocean Avenue and Calhoun Avenue (1856-1902); and the Egan Cottage ("The Cedars") at 314 Jackson Avenue (c.1865-1902). All of these buildings have been destroyed, by man, fire or hurricane. The Egan Cottage survived as a residence for years until it was destroyed by Hurricane Katrina in 2005.¹¹

The resort industry brought a period of prosperity that was interrupted by the Civil War. Steamship service was halted after Union boats anchored at nearby Ship Island.¹² After the war, conditions in the South were unfavorable to resort towns, and Ocean Springs suffered. The completion of the railroad between New Orleans and Mobile in 1870 marked the beginning of economic improvements. It was a faster mode of transportation than the steamship, resulting in the revival of the tourist trade, as well as the growth of other businesses.¹³ This line, originally the New Orleans, Mobile & Chattanooga and later reorganized as the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas, was leased by the Louisville & Nashville (L & N) Railroad in 1880 and purchased by that line in 1881. Between 1870 and 1880, the permanent population grew from 560 to 840, an increase of 50 percent.¹⁴

As the population increased and demand for visitor accommodations grew, Ocean Springs experienced shortages in single family houses, boarding houses, and hotels. A number of houses within the boundaries of the historic district date from the 1880s, including the house at 1203 Calhoun Avenue (Inventory No. 54) and the house at 1204 Porter Avenue (Inventory No. 270). The O'Keefe-Clark Boarding House, originally located on the northwest corner of Porter and Jackson avenues, was purchased in 1874 to operate as a boarding house. This structure was moved to its current location at 2122 Government Street around 1910 and is not within the boundaries of the historic district. It is individually listed in the National Register.¹⁵ (NR, 1987)

Several hotels were built in the years following the arrival of the railroad, both in the downtown area near the depot, and south of downtown on Biloxi Bay, but none are known to have survived.¹⁶ The hotel that was built on the southeast corner of Robinson and Washington Avenues in 1880 (originally known as the VanCleave Hotel) was destroyed by fire in 1920. The Shanahan Hotel operated on the northeast corner of Washington and Calhoun avenues from the early 1890s until 1919 when it was also destroyed by fire. Other hotels built in the late 1880s and early 1890s included two located on Biloxi Bay: the Beach Hotel and the French Hotel. The Beach Hotel, which was located on Front Beach, was demolished to make way for a larger building in 1909. The French Hotel, which was located on Front Beach near Martin Avenue, was destroyed by Hurricane Camille in 1969.

In addition to accelerating the tourism industry, the railroad provided jobs for a number of residents, many of whom lived within the boundaries of the historic district. Houses of railroad workers included James Murphy, a pumper, who lived at 619 Porter Avenue starting in 1923 (1897, Inventory No. 249); and Dave Davis, a bridge and dredge foreman, who lived in the house at 526 Jackson Avenue from 1920-1928 (c.1897, Inventory No. 478).¹⁷

Among other houses associated with L & N railroad workers were six houses constructed between 1891 and 1901 to accommodate black laborers. Four of these survive on Robinson Street, just south of the railroad track. The house at 1313 Robinson Street, a Vernacular Creole Cottage (Inventory No. 318) [Photo 9], has the highest degree of integrity of the remaining dwellings.¹⁸ Railroads employed large numbers of black workers during this period of railroad expansion and labor shortages. Work in this industry represented an opportunity for rural blacks in the South, who were often trapped in the tenant farming system.

The structure most closely associated with the railroad is the L & N Depot, built in 1907 (Inventory No. 438) [Photo 8]. It remained in use until 1965 when it was closed by the railroad.¹⁹ The building, which replaced an earlier depot, is located just south of the railroad tracks on the east side of Washington Avenue.

Tourism helped drive other businesses in Ocean Springs, notably the seafood industry. Fishing had been a regular part of life since early settlement, but a commercial market for local seafood did not exist until Ocean Springs became established as a tourist destination. The 1860 Census records showed most men working as farmers, laborer, carpenters, or colliers (charcoal burners). Later enumerations, in 1870 and 1880, showed a significant increase in seafood-related occupations, such as fisherman and oysterman.²⁰

After the ice industry was established, seafood could be shipped by rail to other areas. The first ice plant in Ocean Springs was built near the L & N Railroad Station in 1899. In the early 20th century, a complex consisting of the Ocean Springs Ice Company (built 1903) and the Ocean Springs Packing Company (built 1915) was developed on Biloxi Bay just south of the railroad tracks.²¹ None of these facilities survives. The only known extant resource associated with the ice industry is the Ocean Springs Ice and Coal building at 624 Jackson Avenue (Inventory No. 201), which was built in 1927.²² This former industrial building has been adapted for office use.

Several oyster houses were located on Front Beach at the foot of Jackson and Washington Avenues from at least the turn of the 20th century until recent times. These were small sheds supported by pilings. Located as they were in a vulnerable area, they were all ultimately destroyed by hurricanes. Some of the men who operated these packing plants were Thomas Friar (1845-1918), Joseph Catchot (1858-1919), and Narcisse Seymour (1849-1931). The last of these, Ocean Springs Seafood, operated by the Fayard family and located at the foot of Jackson Avenue, was destroyed by Hurricane Katrina.²³

By 1890, the city's year-round population had reached 1,148.²⁴ The 1893 Sanborn Map shows a downtown positioned south of the L & N depot and car shed comprised of hotels, several general stores, a meat market, liveries, a drug store, furniture stores, a confectionary, a barber, a fire house, a grocery store, churches, schools, and a post office. By 1898, a fraternal hall, a photographer, a printer, and a bakery had been added.²⁵ Among buildings constructed during this period that survive are the Catchot Building, 806 Washington Avenue (1897, Inventory No. 423), and St. John's Episcopal Church, 705 Porter Avenue, (1892, Inventory No. 253) [Photo 29].

The prosperous years of the early 20th century produced a number of substantial buildings including the Ocean Springs State Bank at 1001 Government Street (1910/1955/1993, Inventory No. 143), and the Farmers and Merchants State Bank at 929 Washington Avenue (1912 [Photo 6], Inventory No. 437). The Ocean Springs News building at 623 Washington Avenue (1911, Inventory No. 411) housed a local newspaper until c.1935.

Historically, dwellings co-existed with commercial buildings throughout the downtown, as evidenced by Sanborn Maps dating from 1893 to 1944. The 1893 map showed the city's downtown extending roughly from the railroad tracks south to Porter Avenue, extending east and west on DeSoto Street and Porter Avenue, and east on Government Street and Bowen Avenue for short distances. A small number of early 20th century houses are extant in the downtown area, including the Kiernan House at 622 Washington Avenue (1914, Inventory No. 410), and the Jacques Bertuccini House at 619 Washington Avenue (1903, Inventory No. 408) [Photo 2]. Bertuccini's Barbershop, immediately to the south of his house (c.1903, Inventory No. 409) [Photo 1], illustrates another characteristic of the turn-of-the-century downtown, a business combined with a dwelling, either in the same building or on the same lot. Over time, houses were replaced by commercial buildings, and the commercial area gradually grew farther south on Washington Avenue and east on Government Street and Porter Avenue.

Small neighborhood businesses were also seen during the late 19th and early 20th centuries in residential areas, either attached to dwellings, or in separate buildings nearby. For example, the 1925 Sanborn shows the house at 420 Jackson Avenue with a store building on the same lot (Von Rosambeau-Gautier House, 1917, Inventory No. 461). By the time the map was updated in 1944, the store had been removed. According to local historian Ray Bellande, it housed the Von Rosambeau's grocery and millinery businesses between 1917 and 1931.²⁶

By around 1920, the downtown area as seen today was more or less established, though buildings and businesses changed over time. The city's population that year was recorded as 1,732, a level probably achieved during the years between 1917 and 1920, when jobs were plentiful at the Pascagoula shipyards.²⁷ The 1920 Census recorded over 100 Ocean Springs residents working in shipyards during this time as carpenters, laborers, and boilermakers.²⁸ The city experienced population loss in the 1920s as the war production jobs disappeared, and the tourist industry declined.²⁹

Despite these reverses, other sectors of the economy were stable, and new investment continued. For example, U.S. Highway 90 was planned in cooperation with the Federal government in 1925, and a new Ocean Springs Public School was constructed at 1600 Government Street in 1927 (Inventory No. 188) [Photo 11].³⁰ The War Memorial Bridge across Biloxi Bay was completed in 1930.³¹ The draw was removed and the bridge was put into service as a fishing pier after the new Bay Bridge was completed in 1962. Both of these bridges were destroyed by Hurricane Katrina.³² Toward the end of the 1930s, several large infrastructure projects were initiated. In 1939, work was completed on the Inner Harbor including a 200-foot-long dock. Projects related to road protection, the seawall, and beach construction started in 1940.³³

In 1933 the Civil Works Administration employed over 200 people in various projects. Brothers Walter I. Anderson (1903-1965), Peter Anderson (1901-1984), and James McConnell ("Mac") Anderson (1907-1998) were selected for a Public Works of Art Project to create murals for the Ocean Springs Public School. The fish and bird tile mural created by Peter and Mac in 1934 was called "Ocean Springs: Past and Present." Walter's murals were later moved to the Walter Anderson Museum of Art, a 1991 addition to the Ocean Springs Community Center (510-512 Washington Avenue, (1950, Inventory No. 510). The tiles have been restored, and remain in the old school, which is now the Mary C. O'Keefe Cultural Center (1600 Government Street, 1927, Inventory No. 188) [Photo 11]. The Anderson brothers were local artists who later achieved national recognition.³⁴

Depression-era projects and work programs assisted the community in the 1930s while business, including the tourism and seafood industries, struggled. As in the rest of the nation, the economy did not fully recover until the United States began to mobilize for World War II, which added jobs related to the construction of Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi and shipbuilding in Pascagoula. The growth in population associated with new jobs created regional housing shortages. The people of Ocean Springs responded as they did during World War I by renting out rooms in their homes, converting single family houses to apartments, and building new housing.³⁵ At least two new developments accommodated workers, though both were likely built for the tourist trade. These were Terry Courts on Front Beach and Martin Avenue, a group of seven duplex cottages (not extant); and Heffner Court at 811 Porter Avenue, a complex of six cottages with two units each (1941, Inventory No. 258a-f) [Photo 27].³⁶

After World War II, the population of Ocean Springs grew rapidly, from 1,891 in 1940, to 3,058 in 1950.³⁷ This growth, which was higher than the rate of growth for both the United States and Jackson County, largely represented the post-war suburbanization of the city, facilitated by an increase in car ownership. The population continued to grow at a high rate, reaching 5,025 in 1960. Most of the buildings from this period were houses, although many new commercial and public buildings were also constructed in support of the city's larger population. The population of Ocean Springs also grew rapidly in the 1960s and 1970s, partly due to annexations.³⁸

During the period of post-World War II population growth and economic expansion, Ocean Springs established its identity as a bedroom community for nearby employment centers. Slightly more than 30 percent of the buildings in the historic district, most of them houses, were built during the period extending from 1945 to 1967. Dwellings in this era are predominantly of the Minimal Traditional and Ranch styles.

A more active municipal government was visible in the 1950s. The first zoning ordinance was adopted in 1952, and a new city hall on Porter Avenue at Dewey Avenue was completed in 1955 (1018 Porter Avenue, 1955, Inventory No. 265) [Photo 26]. In 1959, the property on the northeast corner of Washington and Calhoun avenues (once the site of the Shanahan Hotel, destroyed by fire in 1919) was donated to the city for a park by Katherine Crane Powers. The same year, East Elementary School (now Oak Park Elementary) on Government Street opened. The sewage treatment plant was put into service in 1960.³⁹

U.S. Highway 90 was improved along the Mississippi Gulf Coast starting in the 1940s. In Ocean Springs, the highway was re-routed from Porter Avenue, Washington Avenue and Government Street to the newly acquired right-of-way north of the railroad tracks. The new four-lane highway opened in 1961. The following year, the new U.S. Highway 90 Bridge over Biloxi Bay was completed. A small airport was developed about a mile east of the city in the 1960s.⁴⁰

Among important employers in the post-World War II period were E.R. Moore and Ferson Optics Company. E.R. Moore was a Chicago garment manufacturer that expanded to Ocean Springs in 1950, and was located in a building on Government Street. Ferson Optics opened on the second floor of Lovelace Pharmacy (Bailey Building, 801 Washington Avenue, 1926, Inventory 422) [Photo 4] in 1951 and moved to Government Street in 1953.⁴¹ The company was acquired by Bausch and Lomb in 1968.⁴²

Commerce

The district retains a number of resources important to the city's commercial history, including an intact downtown. In addition, there are properties outside downtown that relate to Ocean Springs' commercial history, including houses of business owners.

Perhaps the earliest building in the district related to commerce is the Sanatorium of Dr. William Austin, who built the Ocean Springs Hotel. Austin's Sanatorium is a Vernacular Center Hall structure built c.1855 and located at 418 Martin Avenue (Inventory No. 481).

Most of the city's commercial buildings are located in the downtown area, where development started around 1870 with the start of railroad service. The railroad was pivotal to Ocean Springs' commercial success. One of the few extant resources related to this transportation mode is the L & N Railroad Depot, completed in 1907 (1000 Washington Avenue, Inventory No. 438) [Photo 8].

The J. O'Keefe Undertakers and Livery, built in 1890, may be the oldest extant structure directly related to commerce in the downtown area (917 Porter Avenue, Inventory No. 489). Another early resource is the Jacques Bertuccini Barbershop, a Folk Victorian/Early 20th Century Commercial building at 619A Washington Avenue, completed c.1903 (Inventory No. 409).

The oldest extant structure that included lease spaces is the Catchot Building, a Colonial Revival Vernacular Commercial style structure located at 806 Washington Avenue (1897/1965/2001, Inventory No. 423). Among businesses that were located here at various times were a saloon, grocery store, and drug store. The Ocean Springs State Bank opened on the second floor of the Catchot Building before the bank constructed its own building down the street (Ocean Springs

Among other buildings associated with the history of commercial development in the downtown area are the Ocean Springs News, a Vernacular Early 20th Century Commercial building constructed in 1911 (623 Washington Avenue, Inventory No. 411), the Bailey Building, a Colonial Revival Vernacular Early 20th Century Commercial building dating from 1926 (801 Washington Avenue, Inventory No. 422) [Photo 4], the Young-Steelman Building, built in 1926 as a garage and later converted to a grocery store (1210 Government Street, Inventory No. 160) [Photo 7], a Spanish Eclectic style building at 1016-1018 Government Street built in 1945 (Inventory No. 148), and an example of a multi-tenant building at 900-904 Washington Avenue that represents the modern era (Inventory No. 425).

The seafood industry was important in Ocean Springs from the mid-19th century, but few buildings associated with this commercial activity survive. There are residences of people involved in the seafood industry, however, including the home of Captain Antonio Catchot at 703 Porter Avenue (1915, Inventory No. 252) [Photo 28]; and the house at 302 Dewey Avenue (1928, Inventory No. 98) [Photo 22], owned by fisherman John R. Seymour, a member of a family that was prominent in the seafood business. Dewey Avenue, south of Calhoun Avenue, was the home of several other families who worked in the seafood industry, including Ryan, Benezue, and Beaugez families. Houses of these families may survive, but have not been identified.⁴³

Several houses in the historic district are associated with other important businessmen. One of these is the Thomas Isaac Keys House, a Craftsman Gable-Front Bungalow located at 1105 Desoto Street (1918, Inventory No. 83). Keys (1861-1931) was an African American businessman and an early postmaster.⁴⁴ The building is listed on the National Register as part of the Ocean Springs MRA.⁴⁵

Community Planning and Development

The character of the historic district was largely formed as a result of planning and development activities throughout the period of significance (c.1850-1962). Most of the present-day historic district was owned by Louis Auguste LaFontaine (1762-c.1813), who owned 237 acres roughly bounded by Government Street on the north, Martin Avenue on the west, General Pershing Avenue on the east, and Biloxi Bay on the south. His widow, Catherine Bourgeois (1768-c.1845), referred to as the Widow LaFontaine in land records, had several heirs. Upon her death, her land was divided into five tracts extending from the Biloxi Bay to the northern boundary. Over time, these tracts passed to children of the heir, or were sold, and were divided into smaller parcels. The current street configuration is related to the patterns created by these subdivisions.

The streets are roughly based on a grid, but with irregularly sized blocks, and uneven connections.⁴⁶

Early development was in the vicinity of the steamboat landing, at the end of Jackson Avenue. The extant resources from this pre-railroad era, six structures dating from 1850 to 1870, are all located in this area. Among these are residences at 509 Washington Avenue (Hubbard-Armstrong-Bauman House, 1850, Inventory No. 509), and 520 Jackson Avenue (Hanson-Verrette House, c.1860, Inventory No. 474).

The construction of the railroad line, several blocks north of the steamboat landing, drew development to that area. As discussed above under "Commerce," Ocean Springs' downtown dates from 1870, when the railroad line was completed. The Catchot Building is one of the earliest extant resources in this part of the early town (806 Washington Avenue, 1897, Inventory No. 325). The resource most closely related to the railroad is the L & N Railroad Depot (1000 Washington Avenue, 1907, Inventory No. 438) [Photo 8].

The Census recorded the town's population as 1,148 in 1890, a 37 percent increase from the 1880 count. Growth at this time was related to jobs generated by the railroad, the resort industry, and the seafood industry. Many of the district's houses date from this time. As the community became denser, fires must have been a concern, and a fire department was organized. By 1893, a firehouse was on the east side of Washington Avenue, south of Porter Avenue, in the approximate location of the 1918 fire station that houses the Senior Citizens' Center today (Ocean Springs Fire Company No. 1, 514 Washington Avenue, 1918, Inventory No. 512).⁴⁷

In 1892, Ocean Springs was incorporated as a town. At this time, the positions of mayor, aldermen, and town marshal were defined as part of the town charter. Local government offices were first located in a building on Washington Street (not extant), and later in leased space in the Farmers and Merchants State Bank Building (929 Washington Avenue, 1912, Inventory No. 437) [Photo 6]. City Hall moved from this space in 1941 into the former National Guard Armory, and later to the 1918 firehouse, after the fire department moved to a new facility. In 1947, Ocean Springs was incorporated as a city. The current city hall was completed in 1955 (1018 Porter Avenue, 1955, Inventory No.265) [Photo 26]. The city's first zoning ordinance, adopted in 1952, established regulations to provide order for future growth.⁴⁸

Critical infrastructure fueled development in Ocean Springs starting in 1925, when the Old Spanish Trail (U.S. Highway 90) was paved. It extended from Washington Avenue to the Alabama state line, and was routed along Government Street in Ocean Springs. Many of the buildings that remain on Government Street represent its history as an important transportation corridor.⁴⁹ For example, the Young Steelman Building, now a restaurant, was built as a commercial garage between 1926 and 1933 (Vernacular Mid-20th Century Commercial, 1210 Government Street, Inventory No. 160) [Photo 7].

The War Memorial Bridge (not extant) connected Ocean Springs with Biloxi in 1930, reducing the travel distance by seven miles. U.S. Highway 90 followed Porter Avenue to the west to connect to this bridge. Resources on this street related to the highway included Heffner Court, a motor court built in 1941 at 811 Porter Avenue (Inventory No. 258a-f) [Photo 27]; and Wilbur's Motel built in 1952 on the southeast corner of Porter Avenue and Martin Avenue (not extant). A Texaco Service Station, established on the southeast corner of Washington Avenue and Porter Avenue in 1930, was replaced in 1960 by the present building on the site (522 Washington Avenue, Inventory No. 404).⁵⁰

In the mid-20th century, the presence of U.S. Highway 90 and increased car ownership facilitated Ocean Springs' growth as a bedroom community. During World War II, many workers at Ingalls Shipbuilding in Pascagoula and Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi found housing in Ocean Springs. The 1940 Census recorded a number of Ocean Springs residents as working at a shipyard (probably at Ingalls), with jobs such as welder and machinist. The Census of that year also recorded several boarding housing, including one operated by Mildred Edwards on Martin Street that was converted to an apartment building when thousands of workers moved to the region to construct Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi. The Edwards boarding house was destroyed by Hurricane Camille in 1969.⁵¹

The population of Ocean Springs increased exponentially during the period from 1940 to 1960 (62 percent from 1940 to 1950, and 64 percent from 1950 to 1960).⁵² Population growth and the associated demand for housing led to new subdivisions. Land that had been used for agriculture was developed for housing or commercial uses. Pecan orchards developed by Charles Forkert (1854-1928), a widely known horticulturalist, were developed for residential use after his death. Forkert's property was located east of General Pershing Avenue, on parts of present-day Ward, Magnolia, and Kensington Avenues, within the historic district.⁵³ Leigh Belle Grove, a seven-acre citrus and pecan farm on the northeast corner of Government Street and Martin Luther King, Jr. (outside the district boundaries) was the location of a Broome's grocery store by 1967.⁵⁴

Federal government housing assistance was utilized for home construction in the post-World War II era. Among examples are three houses built by the Collins Building Company for Madge and Art Fitfield around 1955. The Fitfields planned a subdivision of 15 lots for houses that would utilize FHA and GI Bill home loans. Ultimately, only three houses were built for this particular subdivision,⁵⁵ 604 Azalea Lane (c.1955, Inventory No. 1), 606 Azalea Lane (c.1955, Inventory No. 2), and 515 Porter Avenue (c.1955, Inventory No. 243). It is likely that these types of loans were used to build housing elsewhere in the historic district, as well.

Other housing was developed with private funds. One of the several developers of rental housing during the 1950s was J.K. Lemon who built the Ranch style houses at 1407, 1409, and 1411 Calhoun Avenue (Inventory Nos. 62, 63, and 64, respectively).⁵⁶

Entertainment/Recreation

The historic district is significant in the area of Entertainment/Recreation for its association with the resort industry. The period for tourism extended from the mid-19th century to the early 1960s. Several types of resources were associated with this industry, including hotels, boardinghouses, vacation cottages, and rental houses. A large number of these resources are now gone, having been destroyed by fire or hurricanes, or demolished by their owners. Although most of the related resources are located in the original district, additional resources are found in the boundary increase territory. One significant resource that remains is a house known as Many Oaks (315 Front Beach Drive, 1918, Inventory No. 451). The retirement home of John and Margaret Honor of New Orleans, the house was open to boarders in the early 1920s.⁵⁷ Prior to construction of this house, there were cottages on the property which the Honors rented to visitors. Two of these were later moved to nearby Martin Avenue (420 Martin Avenue, c.1910, Inventory No. 482; and 422 Martin Avenue, c.1890, Inventory No. 483).

Perhaps the last operating tourist home within the historic district boundaries was the Hubbard-Armstrong-Bauman (509 Washington Avenue, c.1850, Inventory No. 509). Helen Armstrong began renting rooms after her husband's death in 1911. The tourist home closed in the 1960s.⁵⁸

August Knotzch, a printer and engraver from New Orleans, built the house at 303 Ward Avenue, called "Laff-a-Lot," as a vacation home around 1924 (Inventory No. 366). He also built the house next door, known as "Linger-Longer," as a vacation rental (305 Ward Avenue, 1923, Inventory No. 368).⁵⁹ Historically, Ocean Springs is known to have had a number of other rental houses. It is difficult to determine, however, which of these were associated with tourism, and which year-round rentals were for local residents.

Early visitors to Ocean Springs arrived by steamboat and were picked up by a horse drawn vehicle. Between 1870 and 1920, the railroad provided the most efficient way to travel. The L & N Railroad accommodated the tourist traffic, establishing an excursion train between New Orleans and Ocean Springs in 1880. This mode of travel, which facilitated the growth of the resort industry, is represented in the historic district by the L & N Railroad Depot, built in 1907 (1000 Washington Avenue, Inventory No. 438) [Photo 8].⁶⁰

As more families bought automobiles, highway travel became popular. Because of its location on U.S. Highway 90, tourist camps and motor courts were established in and around Ocean Springs. According to the 1940 Census of population, Jasper and Jean Biarrus operated a tourist camp on Porter Avenue, and James Bridges was the proprietor of one on North Washington Avenue. The exact locations are not known.⁶¹ At least one example of a motor court remains. This is Heffner Court (811 Porter Avenue, Inventory No. 258a-f) [Photo 27], which was built in 1941 on Porter Avenue, then part of the highway. It consists of six cottages with two units each. The housing shortage in the 1940s, as well as gas rationing, meant that the rooms were usually occupied by war production workers and military personnel rather than tourists. This property is a rare, intact example of a resource type that evolved into the motel of the 1950s, where sleeping rooms were contained in a single building rather than individual cottages.⁶²

Architecture

The architecture of the historic district is significant as a cohesive group of residential and commercial buildings. Because the district was developed over a long period of time, it exhibits a broad range of architectural styles and types.

The early period of development in Ocean Springs (predating the railroad era) is represented in the historic district by seven structures. Two are examples of the Greek Revival style (houses at 214 Washington Avenue, 1853, Inventory No. 495; and 520 Jackson Avenue, 1860, (Inventory No. 474). The remainder are vernacular types including three Center Hall houses (509 Washington Avenue, 1850, (Inventory No. 509; 418 Martin Avenue, 1855, Inventory No. 481; and 505 Jackson Avenue, 1855, Inventory No. 466 and one Creole Cottage (921B Ocean Avenue, 1870; Inventory No. 486b).

The most frequently seen residential styles in the historic district in the years between 1880 and 1910 are Folk Victorian, Queen Anne, and Colonial Revival. Among these are a simple Folk Victorian style house at 910 Calhoun Avenue, built c.1880 (Inventory No. 440); O'Keefe Castle, an elaborate example of a Queen Anne style house at 318 Jackson Avenue, built c.1887

(Inventory No. 453); and the formal Colonial Revival style house at 206 Washington Avenue, built c.1900 (Inventory No. 491). Some of the forms employed in houses of these styles are Shotgun, Creole Cottage, L-front, Center Hall, and T-front. Examples include the Friar House at 611 Jackson Avenue, a Queen Anne T-front built in 1898 (Inventory No. 198); the Carter-Miller House at 1209 Government Street, a Folk Victorian Shotgun built in 1900 (Inventory No. 159); and the house at 610 General Pershing Avenue, a Folk Victorian L-front built in 1910 (Inventory No. 136).

From about 1910 to 1940, Craftsman was the dominant style in the historic district, with 36 examples, along with the related types of Craftsman Vernacular and bungalows with Craftsman details. The popularity of the Craftsman style and related types was probably because of the features that made it compatible with Ocean Spring's subtropical climate: porches, wide eaves, grouped windows, and an open floor plan. Among examples are the Robert Rupp House at 506 Ward Avenue, a Vernacular Bungalow Gable-Front built c.1910 (Inventory No. 383); the Mestier-Carter House at 213 Washington Avenue, a Craftsman Vernacular Hip Roof Bungalow built in 1912 (Inventory No. 494); the house at 308 Dewey Avenue, a Biloxi cottage with Craftsman details built between 1916 and 1924 (Inventory No. 102); the Ladnier House at 501 Washington Avenue, a Craftsman Side-Gable Bungalow built in 1924 (Inventory No. 507); and the house at 1113A Calhoun Avenue, a Craftsman Gable-Front Bungalow built in 1940 (Inventory No. 51 [Photo 20]).

The creation of the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) in 1934 did much to promote other house styles in Ocean Springs. The FHA offered a system of insured mortgages to promote home ownership during the Depression. Houses were required to meet minimum standards, and frequently were based on the standard plans developed by the FHA.⁶³ Minimal Traditional houses, which offered modern floor plans and conveniences promoted by the FHA, started to appear in the 1930s. The exterior of Minimal Traditional houses often referenced the form of early 20th century revival styles, but usually lacked decorative elements. Lyndwood (First Presbyterian Church Parsonage) at 915 Ocean Avenue, built in 1934, was an early Minimal Traditional style house (Inventory No. 485). Twenty-five Minimal Traditional styles houses, dating from 1934 to 1960 were identified in the historic district.

The Ranch style, which became popular in Ocean Springs after World War II, shared many of the features of Minimal Traditional but with a more horizontal appearance. Ranch style houses differed from many previous styles in that porches were smaller or nonexistent. This may have been due in part to the increased residential use of electric fans and air conditioning during the time the style was in vogue. Also unlike many houses of the past, Ranch houses usually had attached carports or garages. The style is the most common in the historic district, with 70 examples, although 16 of these are noncontributing as they fall outside the period of significance.

Examples of the Ranch style include the house at 110 Clark Lane, built in 1949 (Inventory No. 73); the Judlin H. Girot House at 515 Cleveland Avenue, built in 1950 (Inventory No. 74); the house at 519 Martin Avenue, built in 1952 (Inventory No. 234); and the house at 1118 LaFontaine Avenue, built in 1957 (Inventory No. 219). A good example of a split-level variation on the style, built in 1960, is located at 402 Ruskin Avenue (Inventory No. 320).

The majority of non-residential buildings in the historic district are located in the city's downtown. Many are simple buildings, with little stylistic definition. These include the Ocean Springs News Building at 623 Washington Avenue (1911, Inventory No. 411); the Young-Steelman Building at 1210 Government Street (1926, Inventory No. 160) [Photo 7]; and the Tato-Nut Shop at 1114 Government Street 1950, Inventory No. 155).

Interspersed with these are buildings that exhibit a variety of stylistic ornamentation. Among these are the Catchot Building at 806 Washington Avenue in a Colonial Revival Vernacular Commercial style (1897, Inventory No. 423); the Jacques Bertuccini Barbershop at 619A Washington Avenue, a Folk Victorian/Early 20th Century Commercial style building (c.1903, Inventory No. 409); the Neoclassical Commercial Farmers and Merchants State Bank at 929 Washington Avenue (1912, Inventory No. 437) [Photo 6]; the Neo-Colonial Commercial Ocean Springs State Bank at 1001 Government Street (1910/1955/1993, Inventory No. 143); the Art Moderne building at 1010A Porter Avenue (1950, Inventory No. 262); and the Modern style Metropolitan Bank at 901 Washington Avenue (1968, Inventory No. 426).

Nonresidential buildings outside of downtown include several distinctive churches. The two churches that survive from the 19th century are First Presbyterian Church, a Colonial Revival edifice (921A Ocean Avenue, 1886, Inventory No.486a), and St. John's Episcopal Church, designed by Manley M. Cutter and an example the Gothic Revival style, commonly employed on Episcopal churches on the Mississippi Gulf Coast (705 Porter Avenue, 1892 Inventory No. 253) [Photo 29]. Most of the other church buildings are of the Modern style of architecture and date from the 1960s. These include: St. Paul United Methodist Church, designed by C. H. Lindsley (800 Porter Avenue, 1962, Inventory No. 256), and St. James Methodist Church (1418 Government Street, 1963-1964, Inventory No. 181).

The Ocean Springs Public School, designed by William T. Nolan, is another building that is significant for its architecture (1600 Government Street, 1927, Inventory No. 188) [Photo 11]. Eclectic in style, the building exhibits elements of early 20th century English revivals. The building, which is individually listed in the National Register, is also important for its association with Mary C. O'Keefe, who was the School Superintendent of the Ocean Springs Public Schools from 1929 to 1945. O'Keefe was the first female school superintendent in Mississippi.⁶⁴

A number of professional builders and architects worked in Ocean Springs. Fred Bradford (1878-1951) was a local builder who erected several buildings in the historic district. He built houses at 526 Jackson Avenue (c.1897, Inventory No. 478), 1212 Bowen Avenue (1915, Inventory No. 24), and Many Oaks at 315 Front Beach Drive (1918, Inventory No. 451); as well as Fire Company No. 1 at 514 Washington Avenue (1918, Inventory No. 512) and Ocean Springs

Community Center (1950, Inventory No. 510). Other builders included Frank E. Galle, Sr. (1877-1934), and his sons Frank E. Galle, Jr. (1900-1986), and Clarence Galle (1912-1986). Frank, Sr. is credited with building the house at 918 Calhoun Avenue (1924, Inventory No. 442); Frank, Jr. built houses at 610 Rayburn Avenue (1941, Inventory No. 305) and 219 Washington Avenue (1950, Inventory No. 496); and Clarence built the house at 1201 Porter Avenue (1960, Inventory No. 269).⁶⁵

Claude Lindsley (1892-1969) was an architect of note who spent the later years of his life in Ocean Springs. Born in Mississippi, he spent most of his career in Jackson and Houston, Texas, and moved to Ocean Springs in the 1950s. In semi-retirement, he designed such distinctive buildings as the Metropolitan Bank (Modern, 901 Washington Avenue, 1968, Inventory No. 426), St. Paul Methodist Church (Modern, 800 Porter Avenue, 1962, Inventory No. 256), and N.E. Taconi School (Contemporary, 711 Magnolia Avenue, 1952, Inventory No. 225) [Photo 12].⁶⁶

Architects for important buildings were often imported from other places. Examples include William T. Nolan (1877-1969), a New Orleans architect who designed the Ocean Springs Public School (Eclectic, 1600 Government Street, 1927, Inventory No. 188). Shaw and Woleben (Doane Shaw, 1879-1934, and Dean Woleben, 1891-1968) of Gulfport designed McLeod Masonic Building No. 424 (Eclectic, 1102 Government Street, 1928, Inventory No. 151). Jackson architect James T. Canizaro designed Villa Maria (Inventory 260) [Photo 3] at 921 Porter Street in 1969. Although the building is noncontributing it represents the work of one of Mississippi's notable modern architects.

The area that comprises the Old Ocean Springs Historic District, including this boundary increase, represents the history of the city from the early resort era to post-World War II suburbanization. The district retains resources associated with important themes of Ocean Springs history, including tourism, the railroad, the downtown commercial development, and population growth during World War II and in the post-war era. The buildings of the historic district, which represent a range of regional styles and types of architecture, are compatible in design, materials, and scale. The distinctive character of the district is enhanced by the presence of many old trees, notably the live oaks that canopy its streets. The visual appearance of the expanded district, its association with important local and regional historical themes and its high level of integrity contribute to the characteristics that make it eligible for listing in the National Register.

The Old Ocean Springs Historic District, including the boundary increase, represents the largest of Ocean Springs' six historic districts. The Old Ocean Springs District as amended contains a wider variety of types of resources and architectural styles than any of the other districts. It also illustrates a much longer period of significance. The Marble Springs Historic District, listed in 1987, had only 18 resources. The district illustrated the rise and fall of a mineral spring that was associated with the tourist industry from the 1850s to the early 1900s. The Shearwater Historic District was listed in 1987 with 10 resources. Shearwater was associated with artist Walter Anderson and members of the Anderson family involved in the Shearwater pottery studio. The Sullivan-Charnley Historic District was listed in 1987 with three summer cottages designed by architect Louis Sullivan. Indian Springs Historic District was listed in 1987 with 12 resources. The area was home to another mineral springs that operating between the 1850s and the 1930s. Lovers Lane Historic District, listed in 1987, with 12 resources. The district was architecturally significant for its collection of vacation estates, grander in style than those found in other parts of Ocean Springs. All the districts in Ocean Springs were damaged by Hurricane Katrina and each is being evaluated for the effect of the damage on its historic resources..
