Photograph A/3. The fill area behind the Concessionaire Dormitories. Notice the lack of mature trees near the structure. No new trees have established themselves in this area.

Photograph A/4. The view from the cabins toward the Concessionaire Dormitories today. During the period of significance, this would have overlooked a forested knoll.

Photograph A/5. The view of the Whispering Pines Dormitory from the Lodge Loop Road.

Photograph A/6. The Lodge Access Road as it approaches the Registration and Rear Parking Areas. Registration parking is ahead and to the left behind the trees and vegetation, the larger driveway circles to the right to the Rear Parking area.

Photograph A/7. Signage indicating registration parking area as separate from Lodge parking, which could create confusion for Lodge visitors.

Photograph A/8. The former location of a cluster of Standard Cabin units, now reverted to open space between the Lodge and the Sunrise Motel Unit.

Photograph A/9. The retaining wall between the Lodge and the Sunrise Motel Unit which creates the space for the Registration Parking Area.

Chapter 4

Photograph A/10. The North Campground at the time of its construction in 1935, looking toward the Rim (BCRA Archives ACC381_CAT3919 #8).

Photograph A/11. The North Campground today. Although this photo is taken from a different vantage point, the change in forest density is obvious.

Photograph A/12. A large Douglas Fir in the Deluxe Cabin cluster. This specimen was like planted when the cabins were built, however a number of younger trees in the area indicate that it has naturalized here.

Photograph A/13. The front of the Lodge circa 1930, before the campfire ring was removed (BCRA Archives Cope BRCA 2).

Photograph A/14. The front of the Lodge today. Several trees from the 1930’s image have matured, lending a more established feeling to the Lodge.

Photograph A/15. A montage of the Lodge with the two prominent Ponderosa pines in place (collected from BCRA Archives).

Photograph A/16. The front of the Lodge today from a similar angle with the prominent trees missing.

Chapter 5

Photograph A/18. The existing path to the side entry to the Male Dormitory.

Photograph A/19. A utility pole with a light remaining in the area where the Standard Cabins were removed between the Lodge and the Sunrise Motel unit.

Photographs R/1 and R/2. Two trash receptacles at use within the park. The plastic one on the left does not convey the sense of Rustic style or careful design desired within the Study Areas. The one on the right mimics some of the materials and design characteristics that would have been followed during the period of significance.

Photographs R/3 and R/4. Light fixtures should be consistent throughout the park, including the Study Areas. Fixtures should be carefully chosen to fit in with the Rustic style character.

Photograph R/5. Proposed location for the new Bryce Canyon Shuttle stop - near the large tree on the left side of the photo. This would give visitors and excellent view of the Lodge as they rode the shuttle and as they waited at the stop.

Photograph R/7. View of the front of the Lodge from the approximate location of the realigned Lodge Access Road. Existing vegetation and retaining walls would be cleared, creating a clear view of the front façade of the structure.

Photograph R/8. Steps up to Lodge patio area are not consistent either with historic aesthetics and materials or with the treatment installed in the 1980’s.

Photograph R/9. Photos such as this one, taken of the lodge in the 1930s, should be utilized in the process of redesigning the front entry to the lodge (BCRA Archives: BCRA 3897).
Photograph R/10. Site furniture on the terrace in front of the Lodge which does not meet the materials or aesthetic character of the Rustic style.

Photograph R/11. Furniture such as these benches on the terrace, made of natural materials with a "hand hewn" look more closely match the Rustic style. All site furniture in this area should be coordinated and should match in terms of style, scale and materials.

Photograph R/12. A view of the Lodge from the meadow circa 1930. The increase in vegetation from this vantage point compromises the original intent of a feeling of openness in front of the building (BCRA Archives Cope BCRA 3).

Photograph R/13. Young trees encroaching upon the edges of the meadow in front of the lodge. The bush in the foreground is a Woods Rose, which has naturalized in the meadow from plantings along the Lodge Access Rd.

Photograph R/14. The view of the Administrative Parking Area from the Lodge Access road near the Sunset Parking Area. This area should be revegetated or used to site additional employee lodging facilities.

Photograph R/15. An example of signage being used to deter pedestrian traffic on a recovering social trail near the Rim Trail.

Photograph R/16. A temporary barrier in use near the lodge in Zion National Park which provides an even more obvious barrier to pedestrians while vegetation is recovering.

Photograph R/17. The current entry bypasses the main building entrance (to the right in the photo) and uses the side entrance as primary building access. The original entrance should be reclaimed through the installation of a new pathway.
