

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I began this project seven years ago little realizing how complicated it would become. During that time many people and institutions have helped. First, I wish to thank the three superintendents at Cumberland Island National Seashore who served through those years. Rolland Swain initiated the project and secured early funding. Denis Davis helped through the primary research period with constant information and assistance. Finally, Art Frederick found the funds to enable the completion of the volume. Other personnel at the national seashore also helped me to locate and interpret data and provided the logistical support for my research, including Jennifer Bjork, Dave Casey, Janis Davis, Carol Ferguson, Zack Kirkland, Julie Meeks, John Mitchell, Brian Peters, Joyce Seward, Newton Sikes, and Don Starkey. Andy Ferguson played a particularly important role overseeing my final research and supporting the project through its conclusion.

Other National Park Service employees also provided valuable help, including John Harrington, Tom Piehl, and Richard Sussman at the Southeast Region Office in Atlanta; William Gregg, Janet McDonnell, Barry Mackintosh, and Dwight Pitcaithley in Washington, D.C.; Tom Durant and Dave Nathanson at the Harpers Ferry Center; and the staff of the Technical Information Center in Denver.

Many people outside the Park Service also contributed, led by Thornton Morris, who opened his files and his home to me. He provided valuable insight to the island residents' experience and knowledge. Former congressman Williamson "Bill" Stuckey, former legislative assistant Robert Hurt, and Don Barger of the National Parks and Conservation Association also provided key information. I also wish to thank Ann and James Stacy for their hospitality and encouragement and Patricia Janssen for her editorial assistance.

Support also came from the University of South Alabama in the forms of both funding and release time for research. I particularly wish to thank Deans Lawrence Allen, Margaret Miller, John Friedl, and David Johnson and Professors Glenn Sebastian and Roy Ryder for their assistance. Professor David Allison drafted the original maps, which added immeasurably to the book. I also thank those involved in the publication process, including George Thompson and Randy Jones of the Center for American Places, Penny Kaiserlian of the University of Virginia Press, and the peer reviewers, Professors Craig Colten and William Wyckoff.

Finally, my greatest thanks go to my wife, Marcia Robin Dilsaver, who unceasingly gave encouragement, assistance, and understanding throughout the project. Without her help copying files, discussing the data, making multiple trips to the seashore, typing the final manuscript, and listening to my complaints, I would not have written this volume.
