REVERBERATIONS, OPENING ATTACKS BATTLE OF THE CRATER, WESTERN FRONT

Visitor Guide to Petersburg's 1864 / 2014 Sesquicentennial Commemoration

Prelude to Petersburg

By 1864, the war had changed dramatically in scope and purpose, but its outcome remained in doubt. Across the South, Union armies had made great territorial gains. In Virginia, however, General Robert E. Lee's Confederate Army of Northern Virginia still stood defiant—the Confederacy's hopes for independence rode largely on the shoulders of Lee's army. Lee's success in 1862 and 1863 challenged the will of the Northern public to continue the war. He knew, the world knew, that more victories in 1864 would threaten the re-election of Republican President Lincoln and bring to power in the North a Democratic party more inclined toward a negotiated peace—and Southern independence.

Abraham Lincoln's antidote for Lee was a plain-looking soldier who had been unknown to the world four years before: the new General-in-Chief of all Union armies, Ulysses S. Grant. Practical, unpretentious, and direct, Grant promised to "hammer continuously" against Lee and his army until, he said, "there should be nothing left to him."

The hammering began in May 1864, as Union armies advanced along a 2,000-mile front. In Virginia, Grant—traveling with the Army of the Potomac—simply refused to accept the verdict of battle. Though confronted always and stopped often by Lee, Grant (unlike his predecessors) refused to retreat. Instead, the Union army maneuvered through Virginia, battering Lee's at the Wilderness, Spotsylvania, North Anna, Totopotomoy Creek, Cold Harbor, and then moved southward.

The grinding experience left soldiers on both sides exhausted and bewildered. In less than two months of fighting—from the Rapidan to Petersburg—nearly 85,000 men fell killed, wounded, or captured. In the early summer of 1864, the Civil War became a whirlwind, rushing southward through Virginia and the Confederacy. That divided nation and the world watched intently, for that spring and summer the final course of the war would be set.

By telegraph and letter, by railroad and newspapers, word of Virginia's deadly spring reverberated across America. The loss of men in Virginia constituted a deep wound to communities near and far: Bangor in Maine, Natchez in Mississippi, Dearborn, Litchfield, Charleston, Wilmington. These places and hundreds more reckoned with the loss of men who would never come home—most of them buried today as unknowns on Virginia's fields.

Each death challenged the fortitude of a family, the fabric of a community, the will of a nation.

On Memorial Day weekend 2014, the National Park Service will join with a few representative communities across America to remember the struggle of those days of 1864. We will remember not just on the battlefields themselves, but in the communities that received the doleful news of that spring. The struggle of everyday Americans against loss, deprivation, and discouragement helped determine that fate of our Nation in 1864. Reverberations will once again reconnect American communities to the fields where their sons often gave all, and recognize a great and oft-forgotten struggle touched with both virtue and pain.

Locally:

Interred in cemeteries throughout Southside Virginia are the remains of soldiers who never made it home. Some soldiers remains were never even identified leaving their families with questions that would never be answered. These soldiers and their families will be the focus of Reverberations programs occurring at the cemeteries listed below.

Reverberations Communities

Petersburg National Battlefield

Sister Communities:

- Bangor, Maine was the home of many of the men of the 1st Maine Heavy Artillery. On June 18, 1864, approximately 900 members of the unit, acting as foot soldiers, attacked a section of the Confederate defense line located just east of Petersburg, Virginia. Within one hour, about three-fourths of the entire regiment was wiped out by Confederate cannon fire. On May 24, 2014, the Bangor community, including descendants of the men of the 1st Maine, will read the names of those killed or mortally wounded in the June 18 attack, as well as letters written by the soldiers and their families. Local historians will provide background of the 1st Maine itself, and a National Park ranger will provide details of the Petersburg attack.

- Wilmington, North Carolina was linked by two railroad lines to Petersburg, which enabled the Confederacy to move supplies during the war. Also, some regiments from the Confederate and Union armies fought around Petersburg in 1864 and were moved to the Wilmington region by late 1864 or early 1865.

- Stockbridge-Munsee Band of Mohican Indians and the Menominee Wisconsin Indian Tribe of Wisconsin were two of many Native American Indian Tribes which fought in the Civil War. More than 20,000 Native Americans fought in the war. These two tribes fought for the Union though other Native American Tribes fought for the Confederacy, another indication of the divisiveness of the Civil War. Native Americans served in the 2nd New York Heavy Artillery (an infantry unit), the First Michigan Sharpshooters, and the 7th, 36th, 37th and 38th Wisconsin Infantry Regiments at Petersburg.

- Camp Nelson, Nicholasville, Kentucky was the site of one of the largest Union recruiting and training centers for African-American soldiers or United States Colored Troops (USCT). From the opening action of the siege to being among the first troops to enter Richmond and Petersburg when the cities fell on April 3, 1865 their contribution was critical to the Union's success in this nearly ten-month long campaign. Reverberation activities to include presentations on the 114th & 116th USCTs who were raised at Camp Nelson and served at the siege, a commemorative ceremony for the USCTs' family members who died at Camp Nelson and a luminary at Camp Nelson National Cemetery recognizing the USCTs from Camp Nelson and from across the country who made the ultimate sacrifice.

Weather:

Check weather forecasts before departing. Most of the events in this guide take place outdoors. Petersburg area weather in spring can vary and change. Summer days can be extremely warm. Please dress accordingly – wear loose clothing, bring a hat, and choose comfortable, sturdy shoes for walking on uneven battlefield terrain. Bring and wear sunscreen.

Water and Food:

Bottled water will not be sold in the park, but free water stations will be available for refilling personal water bottles and canteens. Please plan to bring a water bottle with you. Souvenir water bottles will also be available for purchase.

In most cases, food will not be available for purchase; however, visitors are welcome to bring lunches and snacks during these special events only. Please dispose of litter and recycling in the provided containers.

Roads and Trails:

Please stay on designated trails and note special event signs on roadways and trails.

Insects:

Petersburg's battlefields contain mosquitoes and a variety of ticks. Knowing tick safety protocols is very important for one's health. Some ticks are carriers of blood-borne pathogens, which can be transmitted when the tick is embedded in its host. Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever and Lyme Disease can be prevented with the right precautions. Check yourself, your children, and all clothing for ticks.

Facilities and Accessibility:

All events will provide accessible parking facilities. Most events and programs are fully accessible. However, several walking/hiking tours take place over long distances and uneven and rough terrain. They are indicated in the event descriptions. Outdoor events will offer portable restrooms that are accessible.

Pets:

Pets on leashes are allowed within Petersburg National Battlefield units as long as they remain outdoors. Service animals only are allowed inside park buildings.

Seating:

Some limited seating will be provided for programs and events that are stationary for a longer period of time. If you are planning to be in the park for an extended period of time, consider bringing a blanket or chair that is easy to transport. It is a good idea to plan carefully what to bring.

Petersburg National Battlefield was created in order to commemorate the campaign and siege and defense of Petersburg, Virginia, in 1864 and 1865. The park staff is committed to preserving and protecting the historical, cultural, and natural resources within the park in a manner that will provide interpretation, education, and enjoyment for the visitors. Western Front Unit including
Poplar Grove National Cemetery
