Search Continues for Missing Volunteer in Rocky Mountain National Park

Rocky Mountain National Park staff continue their search today for a park volunteer that was last seen northeast of Desolation Peaks above tree line, Friday, June 23, at 11:30 a.m. Sam Dratch, a volunteer working with the Resource Management Division was returning to base camp with his National Park Service staff partner when he went ahead. At one point Sam's partner yelled to "slow up," but Sam possibly did not hear because of the wind. Sam was 50 to 100 yards ahead when his partner last saw him. When his partner reached the base camp Sam was not there. The two hiked in to the area on Thursday, June 22, and established a base camp to complete Big Horn Sheep research. Their plan was to come out to the Chapin Pass Trailhead yesterday afternoon.

Sam Dratch is 23 years old with dark brown medium length wavy hair and brown eyes. He is approximately 5'8" – 5'-10" tall and very thin with a runner's build. Dratch was wearing a long sleeve tan shirt, tan pants, and a green pile jacket. He had on hiking boots, however his pack with most of his supplies was at the base camp. He apparently had a headlamp with him. Since his pack was not with him he was not prepared to spend the night in the back country.

Desolation Peaks is in a remote, high altitude, rugged area that has several other prominent peaks. It is located in the northern part of Rocky Mountain National Park. There are few designated trails in the area and hiking mainly occurs cross country.
