FOURTEENTH KENTUCKY VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

The 14th Kentucky Infantry was organized in October, 1861, at Louisa, Kentucky, under Colonel Laban T. Moore, and mustered into the United States service on the 10th December, 1861, by Lt. C. B. Throckmorton, 5th United States Artillery, Mustering Officer. From Louisa it marched to Ivy Mountain and Middle Creek, Kentucky, on the Virginia border, and had a severe engagement with the enemy at each place. After scouting in Eastern Kentucky for some time, it was ordered to Cumberland Gap to join General George W. Morgan's Division. It remained at the Gap until September, 1862, and was in the perilous march from that point to the Ohio river, through the mountains of Kentucky, with General Morgan in his retreat. In this retreat the arduous duties assigned the 14th were performed to the entire satisfaction of the Commanding General, and reflected great credit upon the officers and men. From Greensburg it marched to Louisville, and from there to Danville, Kentucky, via Lexington. After remaining at Danville for a short time it was ordered to Eastern Kentucky, and Colonel George W. Gallup assigned to the command of the District, and, by the prompt, efficient, and energetic manner in which he conducted the affairs of his district, the people once more enjoyed protection from the frequent incursions of Marshall's forces, and earnestly petitioned that Colonel Gallup and his gallant command should be permanently located in that section. But the campaign of General Sherman against Atlanta demanding all the available forces, the 14th was ordered to Chattanooga, and participated in all the engagements incident thereto.

It has participated in the following named battles, in which loss was sustained, viz: Ivy Mountain, Middle Creek, and Salyersville, Kentucky; Lost Mountain, Georgia; Laurel Mountain, Virginia; New Hope Church, Kenesaw, Peachtree Creek, Cass Station, and Jonesboro, Georgia; Johnsonville, Tennessee; Atlanta and Marietta, Georgia.

It was mustered out at Louisa, Kentucky, January 31st, 1865, the veterans and recruits being transferred to the 14th Kentucky Veteran Infantry.
