TWENTY-FIRST KENTUCKY VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

The 21st Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, formed by the consolidation of the men raised under E. L. Dudley and B. A. Wheat, was raised in the fall and winter of 1861, and was organized with E. L. Dudley as Colonel; a portion of the regiment being mustered in at Camp Ward, Kentucky, December 30th, 1861, the remainder at Camp Hobson, Kentucky, January 2d, 1862. Colonel Dudley remained in command of the regiment until his death, on the 20th February, 1862. Samuel W. Price was commissioned and mustered in as Colonel on the 26th February, 1862, and immediately entered on duty as such. The regiment was then stationed at Columbia, Kentucky, but most of the men were either in hospital or scattered over the country; this last, attributable in a great measure to the sudden death of the gallant Colonel Dudley, whom the men devotedly loved and admired.

With the view of placing the regiment on a proper footing, Col. Price applied to General Buell to order it to join the army at Nashville, Tennessee. Upon receipt of orders to that effect, the regiment marched to Creelsboro, Kentucky, twenty miles, and there embarked on transports for Nashville, arriving at that place March 18th, 1862, a detail had been left behind to apprehend and bring up deserters. Remaining at Nashville for two weeks, the regiment having been much improved in condition and strength, it then marched via Columbia to Shelbyville, Tennessee, where it remained for several months. From this place it made several excursions in pursuit of John Morgan's and other Rebel Cavalry. On the 25th July, 1862, the 21st was assigned to the 23d Brigade, then a portion of General Nelson's Division, and stationed at Murfreesboro, Tennessee. It was at McMinnville, Tennessee, at the time Buell's Army was ordered to Kentucky, and shared in that eventful and laborious campaign in pursuit of Bragg into and through Kentucky. After the retreat of Bragg from Kentucky, the regiment returned to Nashville, Tennessee. On the 9th December, 1862, it, with other regiments of the brigade under command of Colonel Stanley Mathews, while out foraging, were attacked near Dobbin's Ford by Wheeler's Rebel Cavalry. The conduct of the 21st on that occasion was highly commended by the brigade commander, and the following named non-commissioned officers and men were complimented in Field Orders by General Rosecrans, for their gallant conduct, viz: Sergeant J. F. Morton, Company F; Corporal Henry Stahel, Company A; Corporal J. P. Hagan, Company F; private George P. Montjoy, Company A; private Cassius Keger, Company A; private Edward Welch, Company A; private Wm. Murphy, Company A; private R. B. Clusin, Company F; private W. W. Oliver, Company F; private Jno. Morton, Company F; private B. S. Jones, Company F.

Colonel Mathews being disabled in the engagement at Dobbin's Ford, the command of the brigade devolved on Colonel Price until some time after the battle of Stone River, in which the 21st participated, sustaining a loss of sixty in killed and wounded. After the battle of Stone River it was stationed at Murfreesboro, from which place it moved with Van Cleve's Division on the 23d June, 1863, to McMinnville, Tennessee, where it remained until August 16th, and then marched to Pikeville, Tennessee,

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S REPORT.

arriving on the 20th of August. On September 1st it moved with the army in pursuit of the enemy, who was retreating south of the Tennessee river. A few days before the evacuation of Chattanooga by Bragg, the 21st was stationed at Whitesides, a railroad station fifteen miles west of Chattanooga, to protect the rear of Rosecrans' army; at which place it remained until after the battle of Chickamauga. By the falling back of the army upon Chattanooga, and the investment of that place by the enemy, the regiment was cut off from the main army and its safety was thus jeopardized, until it was ordered to march via Bridgeport to Chattanooga. On October 1st, 1863, it marched to Anderson's Gap at the foot of the mountain in Sequatchie Valley, where it received a charge from a large cavalry force of the enemy, and kept up the fight for a short time, but was compelled to retire to the opposite side of the mountain to avoid the capture of the entire regiment. In the engagement it sustained a loss of two officers and thirty-eight men. It was afterwards found that the enemy lost thirty men killed, besides a large number of wounded who were carried off the field. The regiment remained in the valley until November 19th, when it joined the 1st Brigade of General Jeff. C. Davis' Division, 14th Army Corps, for the purpose of participating in the battle of Mission Ridge, and assisted in driving the enemy in his precipitate flight to Ringgold, Georgia; after which it marched with Davis' Division to Knoxville, to relieve General Burnside, who was besieged in that city by the rebels under Longstreet. The siege having been raised, the 21st returned to its proper Brigade and Division at Shell Mound, Tennessee, arriving on the 25th of December, 1863.

Brevet Major General Jeff. C. Davis, in a communication to the Secretary of War, says:

* * * "This regiment (21st Kentucky) served under my command during the battle of Mission Ridge, and in the subsequent pursuit of the enemy to Ringgold, Georgia. At Chickamauga Station it was the first regiment to engage the enemy, where its gallantry and discipline were so conspicuous as to attract the admiration of the whole division, and such as to elicit special notice in my subsequent report of operations. This regiment also accompanied me in the campaign to Knoxville and back. The hardships and privations endured by the troops on this march called forth the highest qualities of the soldier. No regiment exhibited a higher state of discipline and efficiency in the whole army than the 21st Ky. Inf."

On January 4th, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, which being done immediately after the arduous campaign to Knoxville, is a voucher for the unswerving loyalty and patriotism of this regiment. It received the usual veteran furlough; at the expiration of which it rejoined the brigade at Cleveland, Tennessee, where it remained until May 3d, 1864, when it moved with the army on the Atlanta campaign, participating in all the battles incident thereto, being, as a good regiment should always be, ever in the advance. On the 20th June, 1864, the regiment charged and captured the rebel works on a knob south of Nose's Creek, and a short distance from the main works of the enemy; the brigade then occupied this knob and held it against seven assaults by the enemy. Here the 21st lost heavily, and the Colonel, Samuel W. Price, was so severely wounded as to be compelled to retire from active duty in the field, and was, upon his partial recovery, assigned to duty, as commandant of the post at Lexington, Kentucky.

After the campaign of Atlanta, the regiment marched to Nashville with the corps, and participated in all the engagements of that campaign. It was finally mustered out at Huntsville, Alabama, January 23d, 1865; the veterans and recruits being transferred to the 21st Kentucky Veteran Infantry. It was engaged in the following named battles, in which loss was sustained, viz: Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, New Hope Church, Pine Top, Kennesaw Mountain, Smyrna, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin, and Nashville.
