The life of the Gilded Age artist Augustus Saint-Gaudens is celebrated in the National Register of Historic Place's Teaching with Historic Places newest online lesson plan. Augustus Saint-Gaudens, born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1848, went on to become a noted American sculptor. Making his mark at age 27 with his statue of Civil War Admiral David G. Farragut, Saint-Gaudens went on to complete other famous works, among them the Shaw Memorial in Boston, the seated Lincoln in Chicago, and the Sherman statue on Fifth Avenue in New York City. This newest online lesson plan, suitable for students and educators alike, explores Saint-Gaudens and the National Historic Site named after him with interactive readings, maps, visual images and activities. Included among the readings are Henry Adams' reflection on the Adams Memorial and Saint-Gaudens letter to then President Theodore Roosevelt who selected him to create the design for the new $10 and $20 gold pieces at the turn of the century. Saint-Gaudens created his New Hampshire home into a studio where he taught fortunate students while he battled cancer.
