Network to Freedom Markers Unveiling

12:00 noon

The contrasts between slavery and freedom are especially poignant in Denton, Maryland, where several sites recently recognized by the Network to Freedom will have new markers unveiled. At the Caroline County Courthouse, several unsuccessful escape attempts ended with the participants in custody. In 1848, free African American Isaac Gibson was tried and convicted at the Caroline County Courthouse for enticing John Stokes to freedom. Ten years later, Irishman Hugh Hazlett was placed in the adjacent jail for helping a group of freedom seekers, before he was sent back to Cambridge where he was convicted of his crime. The story of Richard Potter, a young African American boy kidnapped into slavery, ended more happily as he was rescued and reunited with his parents. The site of the reunion, formerly a hotel, and now the town hall, has been recognized by the NTF, as well as the home that he lived in as an adult and wrote his memoirs.

12:00 noon to 2:00 pm

This church is the descendant congregation from the group led by Underground Railroad agent Reverend Samuel Green, who was convicted in 1857 for possessing a copy of Harriet Beecher Stowe's anti-slavery novel Uncle Tom's Cabin. Green had been suspected of assisting a group of freedom seekers, known as the Dover Eight but authorities were not able to convict him on that charge. Harriet Tubman sometimes stayed with Green and he was part of her network of trusted friends. Numerous escapes of enslaved people in the community are connected to Green. The current building was constructed in 1880 on land adjacent to the site of the original structure. The congregation has recently reacquired the original land.

Ribbon Cutting to celebrate completion of renovations to Webb Cabin

2:30 pm

In 1852, James Webb, a free African American farmer, built this home for his family. A rare-survivor from the period, it is similar to what many free black and poor white families would have lived in during the nineteenth century. The home stands near several roads, including a route she may have taken from Poplar Neck and the Harriet Tubman byway. The Caroline County Historical Society has recently completed renovations of the structure.

Harriet Tubman Underground Railroad Byway (HTURB) in Delaware Byway Bucks

The Harriet Tubman Underground Railroad Byway (HTURB) in Delaware fosters a supportive environment for byway hosts and visitors alike. Byway travelers often have an interest in what locations they visit have to offer. This is often in the way of souvenirs, gifts, food and lodging, refueling, or just looking for something interesting to do while they are touring.

The Byway Bucks program was initiated to direct tourists' attention to small businesses along the HTURB while providing support for the byway and its patrons. Participating businesses along the Tubman Byway corridor are providing discounts, special services, or highlighted offerings to byway travelers. Check the list below for participating merchants who will be displaying the Harriet Tubman Underground Railroad Byway FREEDOM™ logo.

Please be advised, the number of Byway Bucks honored per visit is at the discretion of the vendor.

Harriet Tubman Underground Railroad Byway

See www.HarrietTubmanByway.com to plan your trip. An audio tour is available to download from the website or as a smart phone app from iTunes or GooglePlay.

The Harriet Tubman Underground Railroad Byway shares the remarkable stories of freedom seekers who risked their lives to escape slavery in the 1800s. With more than 30 sites that include the newly designated Harriet Tubman Underground Railroad National Historical Park, the self-guided driving tour shows you the places where Tubman grew up, worshiped, labored, and led others to freedom. Maps and guides can also be obtained from the Dorchester County Visitor Center.

Cambridge: Dorchester County Visitor Center

2 Rose Hill Place, Cambridge, Maryland 21613. Hours 8:30 to 5:00 pm daily. Admission free. 410-228-1000.

Overlooking the Choptank River, just past the Route 50 bridge into Cambridge, the Dorchester County Visitor Center is the perfect place to begin your Harriet Tubman Byway adventure. An exhibit provides background information on Harriet Tubman and Underground Railroad activity in the area. You will be able to pick up your special Network to Freedom “Find Your Freedom” Passport Map and the Harriet Tubman Byway Map and Driving Tour Guide here.

Cambridge: Bucktown Village Store

4303 Bucktown Road, Cambridge, Maryland 21613. Hours 11:00 am to 5:00 pm Friday, Saturday.

“Site of Harriet Tubman’s First Act of Defiance”

At this crossroads, sometime around 1835, Harriet Tubman was almost killed by a blow to her head that she received while attempting to assist a fellow enslaved man flee from an angry overseer. Because of the injury, Harriet experienced life-long health problems and seizures that sparked vivid dreams, changing her views and motives the rest of her life. At the time, Bucktown was a busy community with two stores, a shopkeeper’s home, blacksmith shop, farms, and shipyards on the nearby Transquaking River.

Cambridge: Harriet Tubman Museum

424 Race Street, Cambridge, Maryland 21613. Hours noon to 3:00 pm Friday, Saturday, 6:00pm to 8:00 pm Saturday; closed Sunday.

Operated by the Harriet Tubman Organization, a local group dedicated to preserving the memory and legacy of Harriet Tubman, the museum provides a setting to learn about her life and gain an understanding about the complexity of the Underground Railroad. The museum focuses on the contributions of this Dorchester county native and introduces the visitor to other Underground Railroad figures from the county.

Preston: Linchester Mill Campus

3390 Linchester Road, Preston, Maryland 21655. Hours 11:00 am to 3:00 pm, Friday, 10:00 am to 4:00 pm Saturday.

“Enslaved and Free Blacks Working Side by Side”

Hunting Creek divides Dorchester and Caroline Counties. A series of water-powered grist and sawmills operated here from the 1680s until 1979. In addition to the mill, Linchester supported a general store, post office and homes. Mills and dams provided important crossing points over creeks for freedom seekers heading north through the county. The mill is situated amidst a secret network of safe houses: the Levertons (Jacob and Hannah Leverton House is an NTF site), the Hubbards and the Kelleys on the west side, and Harriet Tubman’s parents Ben and Rit Ross at Poplar Neck on the east side. A professional docent will be at the mill for Harriet Tubman Days.

Ridgely: Adkins Arboretum, “A Journey Begins: Nature's Role in the Flight to Freedom” Audio Tour

12610 Eveland Road, near Ridgely, Maryland, 21660. Tuesday through Saturday from 10 am to 4 pm and Sunday from noon to 4 pm. Admission is $5 for adults, $2 for students 6-18, and free for children 5 and under. (410) 634-2847.

With endless picturesque scenes that reflect the conditions that runaway slaves had to travel through en route to freedom, Adkins Arboretum serves as the ideal backdrop to provide information about the little-known historical relationship that exists between nature and the Underground Railroad.

This educational and thought-provoking self-guided tour examines how nature provided both obstacles and opportunities for freedom seekers. The story of nature and the Underground Railroad also interprets the profound connection between landscapes and historic conditions and events, emphasizing the importance of preserving native landscapes throughout the Chesapeake Bay region.

The A Journey Begins audio tour is included with Arboretum admission.
