Memorandum

To: All Employees
From: Director /s/ Jonathan B. Jarvis
Subject: Motor Vehicle Driving Policy while on Official Travel

This memorandum communicates policy for all National Park Service (NPS) employees operating government-owned vehicles and personally-owned vehicles driven in the performance of official duty, including travel for permanent changes of station, temporary duty, Special Events Tactical Team details, the Law Enforcement Training Center Field Training and Evaluation Program, and any other official travel not listed.

The National Leadership Council received a briefing on a Serious Accident Investigation where a NPS employee was killed while driving on official travel. The Investigation highlighted that we do not have a national policy restricting the number of hours an employee may drive a vehicle. However, this accident clearly illustrates that NPS employees are at risk due to driver fatigue. A corrective action from the investigation report recommended the establishment of a policy to help prevent another tragedy.

I have approved national policy prohibiting employees from driving more than 10 hours, to include breaks and rest stops, during a 24-hour period. Employees embarking on travel after working a partial shift will still be limited to a maximum of 10 hours driving time to include the hours worked earlier that day. This time constraint applies regardless of the number of drivers in the vehicle. Time spent traveling as a passenger by common carrier (e.g., air, rail, bus, or boat) is excluded from the 10-hour limitation. Once the destination for that day's drive has been reached, employees are authorized to drive the vehicle within the local area of their lodging facility or final destination for necessities, such as food and fuel.

When travel involves two or more days, employees and supervisors will conduct and discuss the results of a risk assessment (e.g. Operational Leadership Green/Amber/Red or Severity/Probability/Exposure analysis) prior to departure. A checklist of items (attached) has been prepared to assist in this discussion. The risk assessment should address factors including the route, weather conditions, fatigue, distance between overnight stops, traffic congestion, illness, emergency contact procedures, and vehicle type and condition.

Typically, employees may only exceed these restrictions when documented approval has been given by a supervisor following a risk assessment; however, during conditions where the employee's safety and health may be jeopardized by continuing to travel, the employee has the right and responsibility to seek shelter and then to notify a supervisor once a safe haven has been reached. In these instances, employees may be exempted from the 350-mile, daily minimum driving distance and still receive reimbursement for additional travel time needed, in accordance with 41 C.F.R. 302-4.201.

This change in policy will be incorporated in the next revision of the Director's Orders for Safety and for Travel.
