QUESTIONNAIRE AND TRIBAL CONTACTS FOR WIND CAVE NATIONAL PARK

The American Studies Department at the University of Minnesota has received a contract from the National Park Service to do an ethnographic study of traditional American Indian cultural affiliations to Wind Cave National Park in the Black Hills of South Dakota. All of the research, entailing an exhaustive survey of ethnohistorical and ethnographic sources, primary as well as secondary, has been completed. Having identified the tribal nations with a documented cultural and historical interest in the park, we are now contacting staff in tribal culture resource offices to determine whether these interests remain current. If they are current, we are making a preliminary inquiry of what kinds of sites within the park require protection under the guidelines of the American Indian Religious Freedom Act, the National Historic Sites Preservation Act and/or the Native American Graves and Repatriation Act; 2) what kinds of access do tribal members want to the park and its resources to conduct traditional activities; and 3) under what conditions would the tribe wish to engage in further consultation with the park service on these matters?

The research and report that will be submitted to the park service by the American Indian Studies Department is an advisory document and preliminary to further and direct consultations between the park service and concerned tribes. The principal investigator of the research is Dr. Patricia C. Albers, Professor and Chair of the American Indian Studies Department. Elizabeth Brown, Vanessa Kittelson, and Yvonne Kelly are the department staff working on the project and making the preliminary contacts with tribes.

The following are questions that we will be asking of all tribal cultural preservation officers.

Part One

- 1) Does your tribe have any cultural interests in Wind Cave National Park?
- 2) If answer is no, to your knowledge, do any members of the tribe have any interests in the park?
- 3) If answer is yes, please continue?

Part Two

- 1) Can you tell me what areas of the park are important to the tribe?

Are there any special sites in these areas that need protection from the perspective of the tribe?

How would the tribe like to see the sites protected?

Are there any resources in the park, in terms of plants, soils, or minerals that are important in traditional cultural practice?

Can you tell me what some of these are, and where they're located in the park, and do they need special protection?

2) Do tribal members need to have access to the park to conduct religious ceremonies?

If so, which kinds of ceremonies are likely to be conducted on park lands?

Where in the park would these ceremonies be conducted, and what consideration does the park need to make to accommodate this activity?

Are there any resources, like plants, soils, and minerals that tribal members might need to collect in the park?

If so what are these and where does the collection typically take place, and what Consideration does the park need to make to accommodate this activity?

3) Should the park service include tribal perspectives on the park in their interpretive programming?

If answer is no, why?

If answer is yes, what kinds of cultural material would be appropriate for the park to include in its programming?

Would it be permissible for the park service to tell about any of the traditional stories associated with park lands -- for example, the Race Track story? Any others? For Sioux tribes, what about the Buffalo Woman or the Tokahe story?

4) Would the tribe be interested in entering into further consultation with the Park Service on any of these matters?

Are there any other culturally knowledgeable people from the tribe, other than you, who might be interested in participating or should be included in these consultations?

Would it be better for these consultations to be private, person-to-person or as part of a group?

Would you be interested in attending a meeting with other tribal cultural resource people from the Sioux, Cheyenne, and Arapahoe tribes to discuss tribal cultural interests in the park?

Thanks for your time. Would your office like to receive a copy of the report once its completed and approved by the Park Service?
