

Robert C Klinger

Dr. Klinger is a population and community ecologist whose main areas of research are plant-animal interactions, climate shifts, biological invasions, and fire. His talk today will be focused on the relationships between climate change, alpine mammal populations, and the possibility that the mammals are "managing their own habitat" by slowing or even preventing alpine meadows from being colonized by conifers.